

~~869~~

Bibl. Mont.

869-1

<36626414220015

S

<36626414220015

Bayer. Staatsbibliothek

THE WORKS
OF
THOMAS MOORE.

PRINTED BY A. S. BAKER

THE WORKS
OF
THOMAS MOORE

PARIS : PRINTED BY A. BELIN.

F. Sieurac pinx^t

J. T. Wedgwood sculp^t

THOMAS MOORE ESQ^R

THE WORKS
OF
THOMAS MOORE,

COMPREHENDING

ALL HIS MELODIES, BALLADS, &c.

NEVER BEFORE PUBLISHED WITHOUT THE ACCOMPANYING MUSIC.

VOL. I.

PARIS:

PUBLISHED BY A. AND W. GALIGNANI,

OF THE GRENOS, ENGLISH, ITALIAN, GERMAN, AND SPANISH LIBRARY,

N^o. 18, RUE VIVIENNE.

1823.

THOMAS MOORE ESQ

THE WORKS
OF
THOMAS MOORE,

COMPREHENDING
ALL HIS MELODIES, BALLADS, ETC.

NEVER BEFORE PUBLISHED WITHOUT THE ACCOMPANYING MUSIC.

VOL. I.

PARIS :

PUBLISHED BY A. AND W. GALIGNANI,
AT THE FRENCH, ENGLISH, ITALIAN, GERMAN, AND SPANISH LIBRARY,
N^o. 18, RUE VIVIENNE.

1823.

THE

WORKS

THOMAS MOORE

WITH HIS BIOGRAPHICAL HISTORY

BY JOHN G. WHITTAKER

VOL. I.

PARIS

PUBLISHED BY A. AND W. GAYLARD

AT THE PRESS OF THE ASSOCIATION, 10, RUE DE LA HARPE

NO. 10, RUE DE LA HARPE

1837

CONTENTS OF VOL. I.

LALLA ROOKH.

	Page
THE VEILED PROPHET OF KHORASSAN	13
PARADISE AND THE PERI	135
THE FIRE WORSHIPPERS	176
THE LIGHT OF THE HARAM	295
Notes	347

CONTENTS OF VOL. I.

PAGE	CHAPTER
1	THE VENERABLE FATHERS OF THE CHURCH
11	PARADISE AND THE TREE
16	THE FIRST MONASTERY
20	THE LIGHT OF THE LAMP
11	Notes

A BIOGRAPHICAL AND CRITICAL SKETCH

OF

THOMAS MOORE, ESQ.

COMPRISING ANECDOTES OF ANCIENT MINSTRELSY, ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE «IRISH MELODIES.»

BY J. W. LAKE.

NOTWITHSTANDING the number of literary men to whom Ireland has given birth, there is very little connected with their names which conveys to us any thing of a national association; for the land of their nativity scarcely enjoys a single ray of that brilliant mind, which sheds its intellectual brightness over the sister country. Congreve was an apostate, and Swift only by accident a patriot; whilst Goldsmith was weak enough to affect an air of contempt for a people whose accent was indelibly stamped on his tongue. We could protract the list of her ungrateful and thoughtless «men of mind» even to our own day; but the task would be invidious, and we gladly turn from it to one who forms a splendid exception—one who is not ashamed of Ireland, and of whom Ireland is justly proud.—

Land of the Muse! in glory's lay,
In history's leaf thy name shall soar,
When, like a meteor's noxious ray,
The reign of tyranny is o'er;

Immortal names have honour'd thee—
 A Sheridan, a Wellesley;
 And still is beaming round thy shore
 The spirit bright of Liberty,
 For thou canst boast a patriot, Moore!

Mr Moore is every way an Irishman, in heart, in feelings, and in principles. For his country he has done more than any man living: he has associated her name, her wrongs, and her attributes, with poetry and music, neither of which can ever die, while taste, patriotism, and literature subsist in the world; and whilst these survive, Ireland will form the theme of Beauty's song, and Irish music the charm of every cultivated mind. But, all extrinsic circumstances apart, there is in the melodies of Mr Moore a sacred fire, which conveys its vividness to the soul of his readers; and they must be made of sterner stuff than the ordinary race of men, if their bosoms do not glow with liberal and patriotic enthusiasm, while they peruse the harmonious creations of a poet who has clothed the wild and eccentric airs of his country in words that burn, and sentiments that find an echo in every generous breast.

Had Mr Moore done no more than this, he would be entitled to the gratitude of his countrymen; but his genius, like his own Peri, seems never pleased, but while hovering over the region he loves; or if it makes a short excursion, it is only in the hope of securing some advantage that may accelerate the removal of those disqualifications, which are supposed to exclude happiness from the limits of his country. In "Lalla Rookh" he has given his fire-worshippers the wrongs and feelings of Irishmen; while, in the "Memoirs of Captain Rock," he has accomplished a most difficult task—written a history of Ireland that has been read.

On such grounds we may well claim for Mr Moore what he deserves—the crown of patriotism; but it is not on this head alone he is entitled to our praise. As a poet, since the lamented death of Byron, he stands almost without a competitor; and as a prose-writer, he is highly respectable.

Mr Moore is the only son of the late Mr Garret Moore, formerly a respectable tradesman in Dublin, where our poet was born on the 28th of May, 1780. He has two sisters; and his infantine days seem to have left the most agreeable impressions on his memory. In an epistle to his eldest sister, dated November, 1803, and written from Norfolk in Virginia, he retraces with delight their childhood, and describes the endearments of home, with a sensibility as exquisite as that which breathes through the lines of Cowper on receiving his mother's picture.

He acquired the rudiments of an excellent education under the care of the late Mr Samuel Whyte, of Grafton-street, Dublin, a gentleman extensively known and respected as the early tutor of Sheridan. He evinced such talent in early life, as determined his father to give him the advantages of a superior education, and at the early age of fourteen, he was entered a student of Trinity College, Dublin.

Mr Moore was greatly distinguished while at the University, by an enthusiastic attachment to the liberty and independence of his country, which he more than once publicly asserted with uncommon energy and eloquence, and he was equally admired for the splendour of his classical attainments, and the sociability of his disposition. On the 19th November, 1799, Mr Moore entered himself a member of the honourable Society of the Middle Temple, and in the course of the year 1800, before he had completed the 20th year of his age, he published his translation of the "Odes of Anacreon" into English verse with notes, from whence, in the vocabulary of fashion, he has ever since been designated by the appellation of Anacreon Moore. So early as his twelfth year he appears to have meditated on executing this performance, which, if not a close version, must be confessed to be a fascinating one of this favourite bard. The work is introduced by a

Greek ode from the pen of the Translator, and is dedicated, with permission, to his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, now George the Fourth. When Mr Moore first came to London, his youthful appearance was such, that being at a large dinner-party, and getting up to escort the ladies to the drawing-room, a French gentleman observed, "Ah! le petit bon homme qui s'en va!" Mr Moore's subsequent brilliant conversation, however, soon proved him to be, though little of stature, yet, like Gay, "in wit a man." Assuming the appropriate name of Little, our author published, in 1801, a volume of original poems, chiefly amatory. Of the contents of this volume it is impossible to speak in terms of unqualified commendation. Several of the poems exhibit strong marks of genius: they were the productions of an age, when the passions very often give a colouring too warm to the imagination, which may in some degree palliate, if it cannot excuse, that air of lubricity which pervades too many of them. In the same year, his "Philosophy of Pleasure" was advertised, but was never published. Mr Moore's diffidence of his poetical talents induced him to adopt, and with reluctance to reject, as a motto for this work, the quotation from Horace,

Primum ego me illorum, quibus dederim esse poetis,
Excerpam numero; neque enim concludere versus Dixeris esse satis—

and (at a later period, when his reputation was fully established, he spoke of himself with his wonted modesty:—
"Whatever fame he might have acquired, he attributed principally to the verses which he had adapted to the delicious strains of Irish melody. His verses, in themselves, could boast of but little merit, but, like flies preserved in amber, they were esteemed in consequence of the precious material by which they were surrounded."

Mr Sheridan, in speaking of the subject of this memoir, said, "That there was no man who put so much of his heart into his fancy as Tom Moore: that his soul seemed as if it were a particle of fire separated from the sun, and was always fluttering to get back to that source of light and heat. »

Towards the autumn of 1803, Mr Moore embarked for Bermuda;¹ where he had obtained the appointment of Registrar to the Admiralty. This was a patent place, and of a description so unsuitable to his temper of mind, that he soon found it expedient to fulfil the duties of it by a deputy, with whom, in consideration of circumstances, he consented to divide the profits accruing from it. From this situation, however, he never derived any emolument; though, a few years since, he suffered some pecuniary inconvenience, owing to the misconduct of his deputy. Alluding to his trip across the Atlantic, in a work published soon after his return to Europe, he says: « Though curiosity, therefore, was certainly not the motive of my voyage to America, yet it happened that the gratification of curiosity was the only advantage which I derived from it. Having remained about a week at New York, » he continues, « where I saw Madame, the half repudiated wife of Jerome Buonaparte, and felt a slight shock of an earthquake, the only things that particularly awakened my attention, I sailed again for Norfolk, where I proceeded on my tour northward through Williamsburgh, Richmond, » etc. In October 1804, he quitted America on his return to England, in the Boston frigate, commanded by Capt. Douglas, whom he has highly eulogized for his attention during the voyage. In 1806, he published his remarks on the Manners and Society of America, in a work entitled Odes and Epistles. The preface to this little work sufficiently evinced the talent of Mr Moore as a writer of prose.

The fate of Addison with his Countess Dowager holding out no encouragement for the ambitious love of Mr Moore, he wisely and happily allowed his good taste to regulate his choice in a wife, and some years ago married Miss Dyke, a lady of great personal beauty, most amiable disposition, and accomplished manners, in whose society he passes much of his time in retirement at his cottage near Devizes, diversified by occasional visits to London. To complete this picture of domestic happiness, he is the father of several lovely children, on whose education he bestows the most judicious and attentive care.

¹ The scene of Shakspeare's inimitable tragedy of « The Tempest, » is said to have been laid in the island of Bermuda.

Mr Moore appears equally to have cultivated a taste for music as well as for poesy, and the late celebrated Dr Burney was perfectly astonished at his talent, which he emphatically called "peculiarly his own." Nor has he neglected those more solid attainments which should ever distinguish the well-bred gentleman, for he is an excellent general scholar, and particularly well read in the literature of the middle ages. His conversational powers are great, and his modest and unassuming manners have placed him in the highest rank of cultivated society.

The celebrated poem of Lalla Rookh appeared in 1817; in the summer of which year our poet visited the French capital, where he collected the materials for that humorous production, "The Fudge Family in Paris." In the following year, he went to Ireland, on which occasion a dinner was given to him, on the 8th of June, 1818, at Morrison's Hotel in Dublin, which was graced by a large assemblage of the most distinguished literary and political characters. The Earl of Charlemont took the head of the table; Mr Moore sat on his right hand, and Mr Moore sen. (since dead), a venerable old gentleman, the father of our bard, was on his left. As soon as the cloth was removed, Non nobis, Domine, was sung by the vocalists present; numerous loyal and patriotic toasts followed. The Earl of Charlemont then proposed the memory of the late lamented Princess Charlotte, which was drank in solemn silence, after which a sweet and plaintive song was sung in commemoration of her late Royal Highness. After a short interval, the Earl of Charlemont again rose, and, with a suitable eulogium, proposed the health of the distinguished Irishman who had honoured the country with his presence. When the applause had subsided, Mr Moore rose much affected, and spoke to the following effect:—

“ I feel this the very proudest moment of my whole life; to receive such a tribute from an assembly like this around me, composed of some of the warmest and manliest hearts that Ireland can boast, is indeed a triumph that goes to my very heart, and awakens there all that an Irishman ought to feel, whom Irishmen like you have selected for such a distinction. —Were my merits a hundred times beyond what the partiality of the noble chairman has invested me with, this moment, this golden moment of my life, would far exceed them all. There are some among you, gentlemen, whose friendship has been the strength and ornament, the ‘dulce decus’ of my existence; who, however they differ from my public sentiments, have never allowed that transient ruffle on the surface to impede the progress of the deep tide of friendship beneath; men who feel that there is something more sacred than party, and whose noble natures, in the worst of times, would come out of the conflict of public opinion, like pebbles out of the ocean, but more smooth and more polished from their asperities by the very agitation in which they had been revolving. To see them beside me on a day like this, is pleasure that lies too deep for words. To the majority of you, gentlemen, I am unknown; but as your countryman, as one who has ventured to touch the chords of Ireland’s Harp, and whose best fame is made out of the echoes of their sweetness; as one whose humble talents have been ever devoted and, with the blessing of God, ever shall be devoted to the honour and advancement of his country’s name; whose love for that country, even they, who condemn his manner of showing it, will at least allow to be sincere, and perhaps forgive its intemperance for its truth — setting him down as

‘one who loved, not wisely, but too well:’—to most of you, gentlemen, I say, I am but thus known. We have hitherto been strangers to each other; but may I not flatter myself that from this night a new era of communion begins between us? The giving and receiving of a tribute like this is the very hot-bed of the heart, forcing at once all its feeling into a fulness of fruit, which it would take years of ordinary ripening to produce; and there is not a man of you who has pledged the cup of fellowship this night, of whom I would not claim the privilege of grasping by the hand, with all the cordiality of a long and well-cemented friendship. I could not say more if I were to speak for ages. With a heart full as this glass, I thank you for your kindness to me, and have the sincere gratification of drinking all your healths.”

Lord Allen gave “the memory of Mr Curran;” on which a very modest, pathetic, and eloquent speech was delivered by his son, in a tone and manner that produced the most lively emotion throughout the room.

A gentleman afterwards sang a lively and well-written song, composed for the occasion. The subject was the poets’ Election in Olympus, at which there were several candidates, such as Byron, Scott, Southey, etc.; but which ended in a due return of Moore, who had a great majority of votes. This jeu d’esprit produced much merriment, and the health of the author was drank with applause.

Lord Charlemont then gave ‘the living Poets of Great Britain;’ on which Mr Moore said:

“Gentlemen, notwithstanding the witty song which you have just heard, and the flattering elevation which the author has assigned me, I cannot allow such a mark of respect to be paid to the illustrious names that adorn the literature of the present day, without calling your attention awhile to the singular constellation of genius, and asking you to dwell a little on the brightness of each particular star that forms it. Can I name to you a Byron, without recalling to your hearts recollections of all that his mighty genius has awakened there; his energy, his burning words, his intense passion, that disposition of fine fancy to wander only among the ruins of the heart, to dwell in places which the fire of feeling has desolated, and, like the chesnut-tree, that grows best in volcanic soils, to luxuriate most where the conflagration of passion has left its mark? Need I mention to you a Scott, that fertile and fascinating writer, the vegetation of whose mind is as rapid as that of a northern summer, and as rich as the most golden harvest of the south, whose beautiful creations succeed each other like fruits in Armida's enchanted garden—'one scarce is gathered ere another grows!' Shall I recal to you a Rogers (to me endeared by friendship as well as genius), who has hung up his own name on the shrine of memory among the most imperishable tablets there? A Southey, not the Laureate, but the author of "Don Roderick," one of the noblest and most eloquent poems in any language? A Campbell, the polished and spirited Campbell, whose song of "Innisfal" is the very tears of our own Irish muse, crystalized by the touch of genius, and made eternal? A Wordsworth, a poet, even in his puerilities, whose capacious mind, like the great pool of Norway, draws into its vortex not only the mighty things of the deep, but its minute weeds and refuse? A Crabbe, who has shown what the more than galvanic power of talent can effect, by giving not only motion, but life and soul to subjects that seemed incapable of it? I could enumerate, gentlemen, still more, and from thence would pass with delight to dwell upon the living poets of our own land;—the dramatic powers of a Maturin and a Sheil, the former consecrated by the applause of a Scott and a Byron, and the latter by the tears of some of the brightest eyes in the empire; the rich imagination of a Phillips, who has courted successfully more than one muse—the versatile genius of a Morgan, who was the first that mated our sweet Irish strains with poetry worthy of their pathos and their force. But I feel I have already trespassed too long upon your patience and your time. I do not regret, however, that you have deigned to listen with patience to this humble tribute to the living masters of the English lyre, which I, 'the meanest of the throng,' thus feebly, but heartily, have paid them."

In 1822, our author made a second visit to Paris, where he resided for a considerable time with his amiable wife and family. The fame of his genius, his social yet unpretending manners, and his musical talents and conversation, acquired him much esteem with the most eminent literary and literary-loving characters of the French capital. During his stay in this city, at the request of Messrs Galignani, he sat for his portrait, which was most ably executed by F. Sieurac, and is allowed by all who have seen Mr Moore to be a masterly likeness. An excellent engraving from it, by that distinguished artist, Wedgwood, is prefixed to the present edition of his works. The writer of this sketch may perhaps be excused for introducing here an impromptu he wrote, in the blank leaf of a book belonging to a little girl, the daughter of Mr Moore, at his house in the Champs Elysées, Paris:—

Sweet child! when on thy beauteous face,
The blush of innocence I view,
Thy gentle mother's features trace,
Thy father's eye of genius too,
If envy wakes a transient sigh,
That face is my apology.

Previous to Mr Moore leaving Paris, the British nobility and gentry resident in that capital gave him a most splendid dinner at Roberts's. About 60 persons were present; Lord Trimblestown was in the chair, supported on his right by Mr Moore, and on his left by the Earl of Granard. The vice-presidents were Sir Godfrey Webster, Sir John Byerley, and the Reverend Archibald Douglas, who superintended the preparations for the banquet, which consisted of every luxury the gastronomic art could produce. Mr Moore was in high health and spirits; songs, catches, and glees, blended delightfully with the sparkling Champagne. Several speeches were made by Lord Trimblestown, Messrs Byerley, Kenney, Grattan, etc.; and Mr Moore introduced the toast of—“Prosperity to Old England” in the following eloquent language:—

“As the noble chairman has, in compliment to the land of my birth, given the ever-welcome toast of ‘Prosperity to Ireland,’ I beg leave to suggest a similar tribute to that other country to which we all belong, and to whose real greatness and solid glory—all Irishman as I am, and with my political and historical recollections fresh about me—I am most ready to bear testimony and homage before the world. Yes, gentlemen, there may be, and there are (for God forbid that I should circumscribe virtue within any particular latitude), there may be, and there are high minds, warm hearts, and brave arms every where. But for that genuine high-mindedness, which has honesty for its basis—the only sure foundation upon which any thing lofty was ever built—which can distinguish between real, substantial greatness, and that false, inflated glory of the moment, whose elevation, like that of the balloon, is owing to its emptiness, or if not to its emptiness, at least, to the levity of its freight—for that good faith, that punctuality in engagements, which is the soul of all commercial as well as all moral relations, and which, while it gives to business the confidence and good understanding of friendship, introduces into friendship the regularity and matter-of-fact steadiness of business—for that spirit of fairness and liberality among public men, which extracts the virus of personality out of party zeal, and exhibits so often (too often, I am sorry to say, of late) the touching spectacle of the most sturdy political chieftains pouring out at the grave of their most violent antagonists such tributes, not alone of justice, but of cordial eulogy, as show how free from all private rancour was the hostility that separated them — and lastly (as I trust I may say, not only without infringing, but in strict accordance with, that wise tact which excludes party politics from a meeting like the present), for that true and well-understood love of liberty, which, through all changes of chance and time, has kept the old vessel of the Constitution sea-worthy—which, in spite of storms from without, and momentary dissensions between the crew within, still enables her to ride, the admiration of the world, and will, I trust in God, never suffer her to founder—for all these qualities, and many, many more that could be enumerated, equally lofty and equally valuable, the most widely-travelled Englishman may proudly say, as he sets his foot once more on the chalky cliffs,—‘ This is my own, my native land, and I have seen nothing that can, in the remotest degree, compare with it.’—Gentlemen, I could not help,—in that fulness of heart, which they alone can feel towards England who have been doomed to live for some time out of it—paying this feeble tribute to that most noble country, nor can I doubt the cordiality with which you will drink—‘ Prosperity, a long prosperity to Old England.’”

This speech was hailed with the warmest acclamations, and the utmost hilarity prevailed till “ morning grey began to peep.” Never did more gaiety, good humour, and cordiality grace a poet’s festival, than at this farewell dinner to “ Tom Moore.”

To the above specimens of our author’s oratorical powers, we subjoin here two other speeches, of more recent date, which he delivered on occasions which called forth all the glow of his heart, and sympathy of his nature.

On the 6th of last May, the anniversary meeting of the patrons and friends of the “ Artists’ Benevolent Fund ” was held at the Freemasons’ Tavern, the Right Hon. Frederick Robinson, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the chair. In the course of the evening, Mr Shee, R. A., proposed as a toast

“The health of Thomas Moore, and Thomas Campbell,” which was drunk with enthusiastic applause. Immediately after this Mr Moore rose, and returned thanks as follows:—

“I assure the meeting that I feel very sensibly and very strongly the high honour which has been conferred on me, nor do I feel it the less sensibly, from the kind and warm-hearted manner in which the toast has been proposed by my excellent friend and fellow-countryman. To have my name coupled with that of Mr Campbell, I feel to be no ordinary distinction. If a critical knowledge of the arts were necessary for a just admiration of them, I must at once admit, much as I delight in them, that I cannot boast of that knowledge. I am one of those uninitiated worshippers who admire very sincerely, though perhaps I could not, like the initiated, give a perfectly satisfactory reason for my admiration. I enjoy the arts, as a man unacquainted with astronomy enjoys the beauty of sun-set, or the brilliant wonders of a starry night. Amongst the many objects of commiseration with which the world unfortunately abounds, there is not one that appeals more intensely to the feelings than the family which a man of genius leaves behind him, desolate and forsaken; their only distinction the reflected light of a name which renders their present misery more conspicuous, and the contemplation of which must add poignancy to their sufferings. There is no object under heaven more sure to be visited with the blessings of success than that which has in view the alleviation of such misery. I am happy to find that the Government, of which the Right Honourable Chairman forms a part, has taken the fine arts under their protection. It is for them a proud and honourable distinction, that, while they show they possess the talents of statesmen, they also prove they have the liberal feelings which belong to men of taste.”

This speech was received with repeated cheering, and the eloquent speaker sat down amidst the loudest applause.

At the 37th Anniversary of the “Literary Fund Society,” Sir

John Malcolm introduced the health of our poet in the following manner:—

“It is another remarkable feature of this Institution, that its applause may be valuable to genius, when its money is not wanted. I allude to one now present amongst us, whom I have not the honour of knowing personally, but whose fame is well known all over the world. I now claim the liberty to pay my tribute of admiration to the individual in question; for, although I have spent a great part of my life in distant climes, his fame has reached me; and the merit of one of his works I am myself well able to appreciate—I mean Lalla Rookh—in which the author has combined the truth of the historian with the genius of the poet, and the vigorous classical taste of his own country with the fervid imagination of the East. I propose the health of Mr Thomas Moore.”

The health was then received with all the honours; upon which Mr Moore rose and said:—

“I feel highly flattered by the compliment now paid me, although there are others who might more justly have laid claim to it—I allude to the translator of Oberon (Mr Sotheby), whose genius instructed, enlightened, and delighted the world, long ere a lay of mine appeared before the public. I cannot, however, but feel myself highly honoured by the manner in which my health has been received in such an assembly as the present. The soldier is delighted with the applause of his companions in arms; the sailor loves to hear the praises of those who have encountered the perils of the deep and of naval warfare; so I cannot help feeling somewhat like a similar pleasure from the approbation of those who have laboured with me in the same field. This is the highest honour which they can offer, or I can receive. As to the Honourable Baronet who has proposed my health in so flattering a manner, I feel that much of what he has said may arise from the influence of the sparkling glass which has been circulating among us. (A laugh.) I do not by any means say that we have yet reached the state of double vision (a laugh), but it is well known that objects seen through a glass appear magnified and of a higher elevation. There is an anecdote in the history of literature not unconnected with this topic. When the art of printing was first introduced, the types with which the first works were printed were taken down and converted into drinking-cups, to celebrate the glory of the invention.—To be sure, there have been other literary glasses not quite so poetical; for it has been said, that as the warriors of the North drank their mead in the hall of Odin out of the skulls of those whom they had slain in battle—so booksellers drank their wine out of the skulls of authors. (Laughter and applause.) But different times have now arrived; for authors have got their share of the aurum potabile, and booksellers have got rather the worst of it. There is one peculiarity attendant upon genius, which is well worth mentioning, with reference to the great objects of this admirable Institution. Men of genius, like the precious perfumes of the East, are exceedingly liable to exhaustion; and the period often comes when nothing of it remains but its sensibility; and the light, which long gave life to the world, sometimes terminates in becoming a burden to itself. (Great applause.) When we add to that the image of Poverty—when we consider the situation of that man of genius, who, in his declining years and exhausted resources, sees nothing before him but indigence—it is then only that we can estimate the value of this Institution, which stretches out its friendly hand to save him from the dire calamity. (Applause.) This is a consideration which ought to have its due effect upon the minds of the easy and opulent, who may themselves be men of genius; but there may be others who have no property to bestow upon them; and the person who now addresses you speaks the more feelingly, because he cannot be sure that the fate of genius, which he has just been depicting, may not one day be his own.” (Immense applause.)

In 1823, Mr Moore published «The Loves of the Angels,» of which two French translations soon after appeared in Paris. While Mr Moore was composing this poem, Lord Byron, who then resided in Italy, was, by a singular coincidence, writing a similar poem, with the title of «Heaven and Earth,» both of them having taken the subject from the second verse of the 6th chapter of Genesis: «And it came to pass, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose.»

The two poets presumed that the Sons of God were angels, which opinion is also entertained by some of the fathers of the Church.

We have already alluded to our author's «Memoirs of Captain Rock,» the celebrated «Rinaldo Rinaldini» of Ireland; or rather the designation adopted by the «Rob Roys» of that unfortunately divided country. Mr Moore has since increased his reputation, as a prose writer, by his publication of the Life of the late Right Honourable Richard Brinsley Sheridan, which, from the superior sources of information at his command, is, in a literary point of view at least, a valuable acquisition to the lovers of biography.

We here annex a list of Mr Moore's works, with their respective dates of publication, as far as we have been able to verify them.

The Odes of Anacreon, translated into English verse, with notes; dedicated by permission to his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales (his present Majesty). 4to. 1800.

A Candid Appeal to Public Confidence, or Considerations on the Dangers of the Present Crisis. 8vo. 1803.

Corruption and Intolerance, two poems.

Epistles, Odes, and other Poems. 1806.

Poems, under the assumed name of the late Thomas Little, Esq. 8vo. 1808.

A Letter to the Roman Catholics of Dublin. 8vo. 1810.

M. P., or the Blue Stocking, a comic opera in three acts, performed at the Lyceum. 1811.

Intercepted Letters, or the Twopenny-Post Bag (in verse), by Thomas Brown the Younger. 8vo. 1812.—Of this upwards of fourteen editions have appeared in England.

A Selection of Irish Melodies, continued to 9 numbers.

Mr Moore completed the translation of Sallust, which had been left unfinished by Mr Arthur Murphy, and he superintended the printing of the work for the purchaser, Mr Carpenter.

The Sceptic, a philosophical satire.

Lalla Rookh, an oriental romance, dedicated to Samuel Rogers, Esq. 1817.

The Fudge Family in Paris, letters in verse. 1818.

National Airs, continued to four numbers.

Sacred Songs, two numbers.

Ballads, Songs, etc.

Tom Crib's Memorial to Congress, in verse.

Trifles Reprinted, in verse.

Loves of the Angels. 1823.

Rhymes on the Road, extracted from the journal of a travelling member of the Pococurante Society.

Miscellaneous Poems, by different members of the Pococurante Society.

Fables for the Holy Alliance, in verse.

Ballads, Songs, Miscellaneous Poems, etc.

Memoirs of Captain Rock.

The Life of the late Right Honourable Richard Brinsley Sheridan.

For Lalla Rookh Mr Moore received 3,000 guineas of Messrs Longman and Co. For the Life of Sheridan he was paid 2,000 guineas by the same house.—Mr Moore enjoys an annuity of 500*l.* from Power, the music-seller, for the Irish Melodies and other lyrical pieces. He has, moreover, lately, we understand, engaged to write for the TIMES newspaper, at a salary of 500l. per annum.

It is well known that the Memoirs of the late Lord Byron, written by himself, had been deposited in the keeping of Mr Moore, and designed as a legacy for his benefit. It is also known that the latter, with the consent and at the desire of ~~his~~ lordship, had long ago sold the manuscript to Mr Murray, the bookseller, for the sum of two thousand guineas. These memoirs are, however, lost to the world: the leading facts relative to which were related in the following letter addressed by Mr Moore to the English journals:—

“Without entering into the respective claims of Mr Murray and myself to the property in these memoirs (a question which, now that they are destroyed, can be but of little moment to any one), it is sufficient to say that, believing the manuscript still to be mine, I placed it at the disposal of Lord Byron's sister, Mrs Leigh, with the sole reservation of a protest against its total destruction—at least without previous perusal and consultation among the parties. The majority of the persons present disagreed with this opinion, and it was the only point upon which there did exist any difference between us. The manuscript was, accordingly, torn and burnt before our eyes; and I immediately paid to Mr Murray, in the presence of the gentlemen assembled, two thousand guineas, with interest, etc., being the amount of what I owed him upon the security of my bond, and for which I now stand indebted to my publishers, Messrs Longman and Co.

“Since then the family of Lord Byron have, in a manner highly honourable to themselves, proposed an arrangement, by which the sum thus paid to Mr Murray might be reimbursed to me; but, from feelings and considerations which it is unnecessary here to explain, I have respectfully, but peremptorily, declined their offer.”

Before we proceed to offer a few unprejudiced observations on this unpleasant subject, we deem it proper to lay before our readers the various opinions, pro et contra, to which this letter of Mr Moore gave rise. It is but justice, however, to Mr Moore's high and unblemished reputation to premise, that neither by those who regretted the burning of Byron's Memoirs, as a public loss, nor by those who condemned it as a dereliction of the most important duty he owed to the memory and fame of his noble-minded friend — by none of these, nor by any one we ever heard of, has Mr Moore's honour, disinterestedness, or delicacy — extreme delicacy — ever been, in the slightest degree impeached.

The enemies of "The Burning" said, that Mr Moore's explanatory letter was an ingenious but not an ingenuous one — for that, at any rate, it threw no light on the subject. — They cavilled at the words "and it was the only point on which there did exist any difference between us," professing to wonder what other "point" of any consequence could possibly have been in discussion, save that of preserving or destroying the manuscript. They could not see, or were incapable of feeling, what paramount sense of delicacy or duty could operate upon a mind like Mr Moore's to counterbalance the delicacy and duty due to his dead friend's fame, which, according to them, he had thus abandoned to a sea of idle speculation. — Moreover, they were unable to comprehend what business Mr Murray the bookseller, or any of the gentlemen present, had with the business, when Mr Moore had redeemed the MS., "with interest, etc.," and with his own money (that is, the sum he borrowed for the purpose). Finally, it was past their understanding to conceive, how any person could allow his own fair, just, and honourably-acquired property to be burnt and destroyed before his eyes, and against his own protested opinion, even if, from an honest but too sensitive deference for others, he had conceded so far as to withhold its publication to "a more convenient season;" or simply to preserve it as a precious relic in his family.

To this, the firm supporters of church and state—the pure sticklers for public morals—the friends of decorum and decency—the respecters of the inviolability of domestic privacy—the foes to unlicensed wit and poetic license—the disinterested and tender regards of Lord Byron's character itself,—one and all, proudly replied, that Mr Moore had performed one of the most difficult and most delicate duties that ever fell to the lot of man, friend, citizen, or christian to perform, in the most manly, friendly, patriotic, and christian-like manner. As a man, he had nobly sacrificed his private interest and opinion, out of respect to Lord Byron's living connexions; as a friend, he had evinced a real and rare friendship by withholding, at his own personal loss, those self-and-thoughtlessly-intruded specks and deformities of a great character from the popular gaze, which delights too much to feast on the infirmities of noble minds. As a citizen, he had forborne to display sparkling wit at the expense of sound morality; and, finally, as a christian, he had acted like a good and faithful servant of the church, in leaving his friend's memory, and exposing his own reputation, to martyrdom, from the most religious and exalted motives.

The private and particular friends of Mr Moore briefly and triumphantly referred to his unspotted character,

Which never yet the breath of calumny had tainted, and they properly condemned uncharitable conjecture on a subject of which the most that could be said was ——Causa latet, vis est notissima.

The Examiner newspaper gave the subjoined statement, which, if it were properly authenticated, would at once set the matter at rest, to the entire justification of the Bard of Erin.

• We were going to allude again this week to the question between Mr Moore and the public, respecting the destruction of Lord Byron's Memoirs. We have received several letters expressing the extreme mortification of the writers on learning the fact, and venting their indignation in no very measured terms against the perpetrators, and we should not have concealed our own opinion that, however nobly Mr Thomas Moore may have acted as regards his own interest, his published letter makes out no justification either in regard to his late illustrious friend, whose reputation was thus abandoned without that defence, which probably his own pen could alone furnish, of many misrepresented passages in his conduct; or in regard to the world, which is thus robbed of a treasure that can never be replaced. But we have learnt one fact, which puts a different face upon the whole matter. It is, that Lord Byron himself did not wish the Memoirs published.—How they came into the hands of Mr Moore and the bookseller—for what purpose and under what reservations—we shall probably be at liberty to explain at a future time; for the present, we can only say that such is the fact, as the noble poet's intimate friends can testify.

This is indeed an explanation “devoutly to be wished,” nor can we conceive why it should be still delayed. It is highly probable, however, that Mr Moore will himself fully and satisfactorily elucidate the affair, in the life he is said to be writing of Lord Byron.

Such were the conflicting opinions of the time relating to this mysterious and painfully delicate subject; on which, however, we are bound to introduce a few summary remarks.

When Lord Byron's death was once ascertained, the whole interest of society seemed centered in his Memoirs. Curiosity swallowed up grief; and people, becoming wearied by the comments of other writers on him who was no more, turned with unexampled anxiety to know what he had written upon himself. Whether or not the public had a right to these Memoirs, is a question which it is not, perhaps, quite useless to discuss. It is, at any rate, our opinion that they had the right; and that the depository of the manuscript was no more than a trustee for the public, however his individual interest was concerned or consulted. Lord Byron bequeathed his Memoirs to the world. The profits of their sale were alone meant for Mr Moore. Lord Byron's family had no pretension whatever to the monopoly. And though the delicate consideration of Mr Moore prompted his offer of having the manuscript perused and purified, if such be the proper word, by the nearest surviving relative of Lord Byron, we maintain that he was right, strictly right, in protesting against its unconditional destruction.

For ourselves, we think that, in respect to the burning, Mr Moore's conduct is not clearly understood or appreciated. Some blame, as we have shown, appears to have been attached to his share in the matter, not only in Great Britain, but on the continent, where the subject excited an interest quite as lively as in England. But it is our opinion that Mr Moore's conduct in the affair has been too hastily condemned. One duty, we think, remains for his performance—but one, and that most imperative: it is to give to the world the genuine work of Lord Byron, if it be in his power to do so. The opinion is at all events wide spread, if not well founded, that one copy at least of the original work is in existence. That opinion is afloat, and nothing will sink it. If the Life which Mr Moore is supposed to be preparing come out as his own production, it will be difficult, if not impossible, to convince the public that it is not a compilation from the copy which we allude to, or from a memory powerfully tenacious of the original. If it be not avowed as such, its genuineness will be doubted, and a dozen spurious lives will probably appear, professing to be that identical copy, of whose existence no one will consent to doubt. No reasoning, nothing, in fact, short of Mr Moore's positive assertion to the contrary, will persuade people that he could, for years, have run the risk of leaving so interesting a manuscript, or that he could have entrusted it, without possessing a duplicate, in the hands of any one. And, at all events, it will be thought morally certain, that more than one of those to whom it was entrusted had curiosity enough to copy it; and very improbable that any one had honesty enough to confess it.

Besides these reasons for the publication of the real Memoirs, supposing a copy to exist, there is one of such paramount importance, that we are sure it must have struck every body who has thought at all upon the subject. We mean the retrospective injury done to the character of the deceased, by the conjectures which are abroad, as to the nature of the Memoirs he left behind. We do not pretend to be in the secret of their contents, but we are quite sure they can be in no way so reprehensible, as the public imagination, and the enemies of Lord Byron, have figured them to be; and there is one notion concerning them, of a nature too delicate to touch upon, and for the removal of which no sacrifice of individual or family vanity would be a price too high. We have, moreover, good authority for believing that the Memoirs might and ought to have been published, with perfect safety to public morals, and with a very considerable gratification to public anxiety. Curiosity, which is so contemptible in individuals, assumes a very different aspect when it is shared by society at large; and a satisfaction which may be, in most instances, withheld from the one, ought very rarely to be refused to the other. Nothing has ever had such power of excitement upon the mass of mankind as private details of illustrious individuals, and, most of all, what may be called their confessions: and if those individuals chuse to make their opinions as much the property of the world after their death, as their conduct and their works had been before, we repeat, that it is nothing short of a fraud upon the public to snatch away the treasure of which they were the just inheritors. Nor must it be said that the property in question is of no intrinsic value. Every thing which ministers to the public indulgence is of wealth proportioned to its rarity—and in this point of view Lord Byron's Memoirs were beyond price. If they contain gross scandal, or indecent disclosure, let such parts be suppressed; and enough will remain amply to satisfy all readers. But we say this merely for the sake of supposition, and for the purpose of refuting an argument founded in an extreme case; we have great pleasure in believing that the only pretence for such an imputation on the manuscript, was the selfish or squeamish act of its suppression.

We trust that Mr Moore will yet consider well the part he has to perform; that he is not insensible to the narrow scrutiny which the public displays in this affair, and which posterity will confirm; and that he will, on this occasion, uphold the character for integrity and frankness which is so pre-eminently his. We speak with certitude of his disinterested and upright feelings throughout; we only hope his delicacy towards others may not lead him too far towards the risk of his own popularity, or the sacrifice of what we designate once more the public property.

If credit may be given to Captain Medwin, Lord Byron was most desirous for the posthumous printing of his Memoirs; and he seems, indeed, to have intrusted them to Mr Moore, as a safeguard against that very accident into which the high-wrought notions of delicacy of the trustee, and his deference to the relations and friends of the illustrious deceased, actually betrayed them. Lord Byron seems to have been aware of the prudery of his own immediate connexions; and in the way in which he bestowed the manuscript, to have consulted at once his generous disposition towards a friend, and his desire of security against mutilation or suppression. On this subject

Captain Medwin's Journal makes him speak as follows:—“I am sorry not to have a copy of my Memoirs to show you. I gave them to Moore, or rather to Moore's little boy.”¹

“I remember saying, ‘Here are two thousand pounds for you, my young friend.’ I made one reservation in the gift—that they were not to be published till after my death.”

“I have not the least objection to their being circulated; in fact they have been read by some of mine, and several of Moore's friends and acquaintances; among others they were lent to Lady Burghersh. On returning the manuscript, her ladyship told Moore that she had transcribed the whole work. This was un peu fort, and he suggested the propriety of her destroying the copy. She did so, by putting it into the fire in his presence. Ever since this happened, Douglas Kinnaird has been recommending me to resume possession of the manuscript, thinking to frighten me by saying, that a spurious or a real copy, surreptitiously obtained, may go forth to the world. I am quite indifferent about the world knowing all that they contain. There are very few licentious adventures of my own, or scandalous anecdotes that will affect others, in the book. It is taken up from my earliest recollections, almost from childhood—very incoherent, written in a very loose and familiar style. The second part will prove a good lesson to young men; for it treats of the irregular life I led at one period, and the fatal consequences of dissipation. There are few parts that may not, and none that will not, be read by women.”

In this particular Lord Byron's fate has been singular; and a superstitious person might be startled at the coincidence of so many causes, all tending to hide his character from the public. That scandal and envy should have been at work with such a man is not very extraordinary; but the burning of his Memoirs, and the subsequent injunction on the publication of his Letters to his Mother, seem as if something more than mere chance had operated to preserve unconfuted the calumnies of the day, for the benefit of future biographers. Of these Letters a friend of ours was fortunate enough to obtain a glimpse, and never, he told us, was more innocent, and at the same time more valuable matter, so withheld from the world. It were, he observed, but an act of cold justice to the memory of Lord Byron to state, publicly, that they appear the reflections of as generous a mind as ever committed its expression to paper: for though, indeed, the traces of his temperament, and of his false position in society, are there, still the sentiments are lofty and enthusiastic; and every line betrays the warmest sympathy with human suffering, and a scornful indignation against mean and disgraceful vice.

¹ There is some trifling inaccuracy in this, as Moore's son was not with him in Italy. It is nevertheless true, as we are assured, that this was the turn which Lord Byron gave to his present, in order to make it more acceptable to his friend.

The extempore song, addressed by Lord Byron to Mr Moore, on the latter's last visit to Italy, proves the familiar intercourse and friendship that subsisted between him and the subject of this memoir. The following stanzas are very expressive:—

Were 't the last drop in the well,
As I gasp'd upon the brink,
Ere my fainting spirit fell,
'T is to thee that I would drink.

In that water, as this wine,
The libation I would pour
Should be—Peace to thine and mine,
And a health to thee, Tom Moore!

When Lord Byron had published his celebrated satire of “English Bards and Scotch Reviewers,” in which our poet, in common with most of his distinguished contemporaries was visited rather “too roughly” by the noble modern Juvenal, his lordship expected to be “called out,” as the fashionable phrase is, but no one had courage to try his prowess in the field, save Mr Moore, who did not relish the joke about "Little's leadless pistols," and sent a letter to his lordship in the nature of a challenge, but which he, by his leaving the country, did not receive. On Byron's return, Mr Moore made inquiry if he had received the epistle, and stated that, on account of certain changes in his circumstances, he wished to recal it, and become the friend of Byron, through Rogers, the author of "The Pleasures of Memory," and who was intimate with both the distinguished bards. The letter, addressed to the care of Mr Hanson, had been mislaid; search was made for it, and Byron, who at first did not like this offer, of one hand with a pistol, and the other to shake in fellowship, felt very awkward. On the letter being recovered, however, he delivered it unopened to Mr Moore, and they afterwards continued to the last most particular friends.

It is but justice to the unquestionable courage and spirited conduct of the Bard of Erin, to observe here, that, though Byron had stated the truth about the said "leadless pistols," he had not stated the whole truth. The facts were these: Mr Jeffrey, the celebrated critic, and editor of the Edinburgh Review, had, in "good set phrase," abused the Poems of Thomas Little, Esq., alias Thomas Moore, Esq.; and the latter, not chusing to put up with the flagellation of the then modern Aristarchus, challenged him. When they arrived at Chalk Farm, the place fixed on for the duel, the police were ready, and deprived them of their fire-arms. On drawing their contents, the compound of "villanous saltpetre" was found, but the cold lead,

The pious metal most in requisition
On such occasions,

had somehow disappeared. The cause was this: One of the balls had fallen out in the carriage, and the seconds, with a laudable anxiety to preserve the public peace, to save the shedding of such valuable blood, and to make both equal, drew the other ball.

In his youth Mr Moore was in the high road to court favour, and had his spirit been less independent, we might even have had a Sir Thomas More in our days. It is said that when the juvenile Anacreon was introduced to the then Prince of Wales, His Royal Highness inquired of him whether he was a son of Dr Moore, the celebrated author of Zeluco; and that the bard promptly replied, "No, Sir; I am the son of a grocer at Dublin!"

The following anecdote shows that His Majesty King George the Fourth did not forget to pay off the Prince of Wales's "old score" with our poet: —In the king's presence, a critic, speaking of the "Life of Sheridan," declared that Moore had murdered his friend. "You are too severe," said his Majesty, "I cannot admit that Mr Moore has murdered Sheridan, but he has certainly attempted his life."

It was not till after the Prince of Wales's in vestment with regal power, that Mr Moore levelled the keen shafts of his "grey goose quill" against that illustrious personage. He had previously dedicated the translation of Anacreon to His Royal Highness, by whom, it is said, his poetry was much admired. We question, though, if his verse was as palatable to the Prince Regent as it had been to the Prince of Wales. Mr Moore, perhaps, thought as one of his predecessors had done on this subject, of whom the following anecdote is recorded. Pope, dining one day with Frederic, Prince of Wales, paid the prince many compliments. "I wonder," said His Royal Highness, "that you, who are so severe on kings, should be so complaisant to me." "It is," replied the witty bard, "because I like the lion before his claws are grown."

The name of Anacreon Moore, by which our author is distinguished, is not so much his due from the mere circumstance of his having translated the odes of the Teian bard, as from the social qualities which he is known to possess, and the convivial spirit of his muse. Mr Moore seems to be of opinion, that

If with water you fill up your glasses,
You 'll never write any thing wise
For wine is the horse of Parnassus,
Which hurries a bard to the skies.

He is not, however, ungrateful for whatever share conviviality may have had in inspiring his muse, but has amply acknowledged it in the elegant and glowing terms in which he has celebrated its praises. No individual presides with more grace at the convivial board, nor is there one whose absence is more liable to be regretted by his friends.

Being on one occasion prevented from attending a banquet where he was an expected guest, and where, in consequence, every thing seemed (to use a familiar phrase) out of sorts, a gentleman, in the fervour of his disappointment, exclaimed, "Give us but one Anacreon more, ye gods, whatever else you deny us."

Presiding once at a tavern dinner, where some of the company were complaining that there was no game at the table, a gentleman present, alluding to the fascinating manners of Mr Moore, who "kept the table in a roar," said, "Why, gentlemen, what better game would you wish than moor game, of which I am sure you have abundance?"

At another time, after the pleasures of the evening had been extended to a pretty late hour, Mr D. proposed, as a concluding bumper, the health of Mr Moore; a toast which, having been twice drank in the course of the evening, was objected to as unnecessary. Mr D., however, persisted in giving the toast; and quoted in support of it the following passage from Mr Moore's translation of the eighth ode of Anacreon. "Let us drink it now," said he,

For death may come with brow unpleasant,
May come when least we wish him present,
And beckon to the sable shore,
And grimly bid us—drink no More!

We here terminate the Biographical part of our sketch; and, after a few introductory and general remarks, shall proceed to take a critical review of our author's principal works, including some interesting sketches and anecdotes of ancient minstrelsy, illustrative of the «Irish Melodies.» Moore is not, like Wordsworth or Coleridge, the poet's poet; nor is it necessary, in order to enjoy his writings, that we should create a taste for them other than what we received from nature and education. Yet his style is contemned as tinsel and artificial, whereas the great praise bestowed on those preferred to it is, that they are the only true natural.—Now if it requires study and progressive taste to arrive at a sense of the natural, and but common feeling to enjoy the beauties of the artificial, then certainly these names have changed places since we met them in the dictionary.

Formerly, people were content with estimating books—persons are the present objects universally. It is not the pleasure or utility a volume affords, which is taken into consideration, but the genius which it indicates. Each person is anxious to form his scale of excellence, and to range great names, living or dead, at certain intervals and in different grades, self being the hidden centre whither all the comparisons verge. In former times works of authors were composed with ideal or ancient models,—the humble crowd of readers were content to peruse and admire. At present it is otherwise,—every one is conscious of having either written, or at least having been able to write a book, and consequently all literary decisions affect them personally:—

Scribendi nihil a me alienum puto,

is the language of the age, and the most insignificant calculate on the wonders they might have effected, had chance thrown a pen in their way.—The literary character has, in fact, extended itself over the whole face of society, with all the evils that D'Israeli has enumerated, and ten times more—

it has spread its fibres through all ranks, sexes, and ages. There no longer exists what writers used to call a public—that disinterested tribunal has long since merged in the body it used to try. Put your finger on any head in a crowd—it belongs to an author, or the friend of one, and your great authors are supposed to possess a quantity of communicable celebrity: an intimacy with one of them is a sort of principality, and a stray anecdote picked up rather a valuable sort of possession. These people are always crying out against personality, and personality is the whole business of their lives. They can consider nothing as it is by itself; the cry is, “who wrote it?” — “what manner of man is he?” — “where did he borrow it?” They make puppets of literary men by their impatient curiosity; and when one of themselves is dragged from his malign obscurity in banter or whimsical revenge, he calls upon all the gods to bear witness to the malignity he is made to suffer.

It is this spirit which has perverted criticism, and reduced it to a play of words. To favour this vain eagerness of comparison, all powers and faculties are resolved at once into genius—that vague quality, the supposition of which is at every one’s command; and characters, sublime in one respect, as they are contemptible in another, are viewed under this one aspect. The man, the poet, the philosopher, are blended, and the attributes of each applied to all without distinction. One person inquires the name of a poet, because he is a reasoner; another, because he is mad; another, because he is conceited. Johnson’s assertion is taken for granted—that genius is but great natural power directed towards a particular object: thus all are reduced to the same scale, and measured by the same standard. This fury of comparison knows no bounds; its abettors, at the same time that they reserve to themselves the full advantage of dormant merit, make no such allowance to established authors. They judge them rigidly by their pages, assume that their love of fame and emolument would not allow them to let any talent be idle, and will not hear any arguments advanced for their unexpected capabilities.

The simplest and easiest effort of the mind is egotism,—it is but baring one's own breast, disclosing its curious mechanism, and giving exaggerated expressions to every-day feeling. Yet no productions have met with such success;—what authors can compete, as to popularity, with Montaigne, Byron, Rousseau? Yet we cannot but believe that there have been thousands of men in the world who could have walked the same path, and perhaps met with the same success, if they had had the same confidence. Passionate and reflecting minds are not so rare as we suppose, but the boldness that sets at nought society is. Nor could want of courage be the only obstacle: there are, and have been, we trust, many who would not exchange the privacy of their mental sanctuary, for the indulgence of spleen, or the feverish dream of popular celebrity. And if we can give credit for this power to the many who have lived unknown and shunned publicity, how much more must we not be inclined to allow to him of acknowledged genius, and who has manifested it in works of equal beauty, and of greater merit, inasmuch as they are removed from self? It has been said by a great living author and poet,¹ that “the choice of a subject removed from self is the test of genius.”

These considerations ought, at least, to prevent us from altogether merging a writer's genius in his works, and from using the name of the poem and that of the poet indifferently. For our part, we think that if Thomas Moore had the misfortune to be metaphysical, he might have written such a poem as the Excursion,—that had he condescended to borrow, and at the same time disguise the feelings of the great Lake Poets, he might perhaps have written the best parts of Childe Harold—and had he the disposition or the whim to be egotistical, he might lay bare a mind of his own as proudly and as passionately organized as the great lord did, whom some one describes “to have gutted himself body and soul, for all the world to walk in and see the show.” So much for the preliminary cavils which are thrown in the teeth of Moore’s admirers. They have been picked up by the small fry of critics, who commenced their career with a furious attack on him, Pope, and Campbell, but have since thought it becoming to grow out of their early likings. And at present they profess to prefer the great works which they have never read, and which they will never be able to read, to those classic poems, of which they have been the most destructive enemies, by bethumbing and quoting their beauties into triteness and common-place.

¹ Coleridge.

The merits of Pope and of Moore have suffered depreciation from the same cause—the facility of being imitated to a certain degree. And as vulgar admiration seldom penetrates beyond this degree, the conclusion is that nothing can be easier than to write like, and even equal to, either of these poets. In the universal self-comparison, which is above mentioned, as the foundation of modern criticism, feeling is assumed to be genius—the passive is considered to imply the active power. No opinion is more common or more fallacious—it is the “flattering unction” which has inundated the world with versifiers, and which seems to under-rate the merit of compositions, in which there is more ingenuity and elegance than passion. Genius is considered to be little more than a capability of excitement—the greater the passion the greater the merit; and the school-boy key on which Mr Moore’s love and heroism are usually set, is not considered by any reader beyond his reach. This is certainly Moore’s great defect; but it is more that of his taste than of any superior faculty.

We shall now proceed to notice the most laboured and most splendid of Mr Moore's productions—"Lalla Rookh":—

Then if, while scenes so grand,
So beautiful, shine before thee,
Pride, for thine own dear land,
Should haply be stealing o'er thee;
Oh! let grief come first,
O'er pride itself victorious,
To think how man hath curst,
What Heaven hath made so glorious.

Several of our modern poets had already chosen the luxuriant climate of the East for their imaginations to revel in, and body forth their shapes of light; but it is no less observable that they had generally failed, and the cause we believe to be this—that the partial conception and confined knowledge which they naturally possessed of a country, so opposed in the character of its inhabitants and the aspect of its scenery to their own, occasioned them, after the manner of all imperfect apprehenders, to seize upon its prominent features and obvious characteristics, without entering more deeply into its spirit, or catching its retired and less palpable beauties. The sudden transplantation of an European mind into Asiatic scenes can seldom be favourable to its well-being and progress; at least none but those of the first order would be enabled to keep their imaginations from degenerating into inconsistency and bombast, amid the swarms of novelties which start up at every step. Thus it is that, in nearly all the oriental poems added to our literature, we had the same monotonous assemblage of insipid images, drawn from the peculiar phenomena and natural appearances of the country.

We have always considered Asia as naturally the home of poetry, and the creator of poets. What makes Greece so poetical a country is, that at every step we stumble over recollections of departed grandeur, and behold the scenes where the human mind has glorified itself for ever and played a part the records of which can never die. But in Asia, to the same charm of viewing the places of former power—of comparing the present with the past—there is added a luxuriance of climate, and an unrivalled beauty of external nature, which, ever according with the poet's soul,

Temper, and do befit him to obey
High inspiration.

It was reserved for Mr Moore to redeem the character of oriental poetry, in a work which stands distinct, alone, and proudly pre-eminent above all that had preceded it on the same subject.

Never, indeed, has the land of the sun shone out so brightly on the children of the north—nor the sweets of Asia been poured forth—nor her gorgeousness displayed so profusely to the delighted senses of Europe, as in the fine oriental romance of Lalla Rookh. The beauteous forms, the dazzling splendours, the breathing odours of the East, found, at last, a kindred poet in that Green Isle of the West, whose genius has long been suspected to be derived from a warmer clime, and here wantons and luxuriates in these voluptuous regions, as if it felt that it had at length recognized its native element. It is amazing, indeed, how much at home Mr Moore seems to be in India, Persia, and Arabia; and how purely and strictly Asiatic all the colouring and imagery of his poem appears. He is thoroughly imbued with the character of the scenes to which he transports us; and yet the extent of his knowledge is less wonderful than the dexterity and apparent facility with which he has turned it to account, in the elucidation and embellishment of his poetry. There is not a simile, a description, a name, a trait of history, or allusion of romance, which belongs to European experience, or does not indicate entire familiarity with the life, nature, and learning of the East.

Nor are the barbaric ornaments thinly scattered to make up a show. They are showered lavishly over the whole work, and form, perhaps, too much the staple of the poetry, and the riches of that which is chiefly distinguished for its richness. We would confine this remark, however, to the descriptions of external objects, and the allusions to literature and history—to what may be termed the matériel of the poetry we are speaking of. The characters and sentiments are of a different order. They cannot, indeed, be said to be copies of an European nature; but still less like that of any other region. They are, in truth, poetical imaginations;—but it is to the poetry of rational, honourable, considerate, and humane Europe that they belong—and not to the childishness, cruelty, and profligacy of Asia.

There is something very extraordinary, we think, in this work—and something which indicates in the author, not only a great exuberance of talent, but a very singular constitution of genius. While it is more splendid in imagery—and for the most part in very good taste—more rich in sparkling thoughts and original conceptions, and more full indeed of exquisite pictures, both of all sorts of beauties, and all sorts of virtues, and all sorts of sufferings and crimes, than any other poem we know of; we rather think we speak the sense of all classes of readers, when we add, that the effect of the whole is to mingle a certain feeling of disappointment with that of admiration,—to excite admiration rather than any warmer sentiment of delight—to dazzle more than to enchant—and, in the end, more frequently to startle the fancy, and fatigue the attention, with the constant succession of glittering images and high-strained emotions, than to maintain a rising interest, or win a growing sympathy, by a less profuse or more systematic display of attractions.

The style is, on the whole, rather diffuse, and too unvaried in its character. But its greatest fault is the uniformity of its brilliancy—the want of plainness, simplicity, and repose.—We have heard it observed by some very zealous admirers of Mr Moore's genius, that you cannot open this book without finding a cluster of beauties in every page. Now, this is only another way of expressing what we think its greatest defect. No work, consisting of many pages, should have detached and distinguishable beauties in every one of them. No great work, indeed, should have many beauties: if it were perfect it would have but one, and that but faintly perceptible, except on a view of the whole. Look, for example, at what is the most finished and exquisite production of human art—the design and elevation of a Grecian temple, in its old severe simplicity. What penury of ornament—what neglect of beauties of detail—what masses of plain surface—what rigid economical limitation to the useful and the necessary! The cottage of a peasant is scarcely more simple in its structure, and has not fewer parts that are superfluous. Yet what grandeur—what elegance—what grace and completeness in the effect. The whole is beautiful—because the beauty is in the whole; but there is little merit in any of the parts except that of fitness and careful finishing. Contrast this with a Dutch, or a Chinese pleasure-house, where every part is meant to be beautiful, and the result is deformity—where there is not an inch of the surface that is not brilliant with colour, and rough with curves and angles,—and where the effect of the whole is displeasing to the eye and the taste. We are as far as possible from meaning to insinuate that Mr Moore's poetry is of this description; on the contrary, we think his ornaments are, for the most part, truly and exquisitely beautiful; and the general design of his pieces extremely elegant and ingenious: all that we mean to say is, that there is too much ornament—too many insulated and independent beauties—and that the notice and the very admiration they excite, hurt the interest of the general design, and withdraw our attention too unfortunately from it.

Mr Moore, it appears to us, is too lavish of his gems and sweets, and it may truly be said of him, in his poetical capacity, that he would be richer with half his wealth. His works are not only of rich materials and graceful design, but they are every where glistening with small beauties and transitory inspirations—sudden flashes of fancy that blaze out and perish; like earthborn meteors that crackle in the lower sky, and unseasonably divert our eyes from the great and lofty bodies which pursue their harmonious courses in a serener region.

We have spoken of these as faults of style—but they could scarcely have existed without going deeper; and though they first strike us as qualities of the composition only, we find, upon a little reflection, that the same general character belongs to the fable, the characters, and the sentiments—that they all are alike in the excess of their means of attraction—and fail to interest, chiefly by being too interesting.

We have felt it our duty to point out the faults of our author's poetry, particularly in respect to Lalla Rookh, but it would be quite unjust to characterize that splendid poem by its faults, which are infinitely less conspicuous than its manifold beauties. There is not only a richness and brilliancy of diction and imagery spread over the whole work, that indicate the greatest activity and elegance of fancy in the author; but it is every where pervaded, still more strikingly, by a strain of tender and noble feeling, poured out with such warmth and abundance, as to steal insensibly on the heart of the reader, and gradually to overflow it with a tide of sympathetic emotion. There are passages indeed, and these neither few nor brief, over which the very genius of poetry seems to have breathed his richest enchantment—where the melody of the verse and the beauty of the images conspire so harmoniously with the force and tenderness of the emotion, that the whole is blended into one deep and bright stream of sweetness and feeling, along which the spirit of the reader is borne passively through long reaches of delight. Mr Moore's poetry, indeed, where his happiest vein is opened, realizes more exactly than that of any other writer, the splendid account which is given by *Comus*¹ of the song of

His mother Circe, and the sirens three,
Amid the flowery-kirtled Naiades,
Who, as they sung, would take the prison'd soul,
And lap it in Elysium.

And though it is certainly to be regretted that he should occasionally have broken the measure with more frivolous strains, or filled up its intervals with a sort of brilliant false falsetto, it should never be forgotten, that his excellencies are as peculiar to himself as his faults, and, on the whole, we may assert, more characteristic of his genius.

The legend of Lalla Rookh is very sweetly and gaily told; and is adorned with many tender as well as lively passages—without reckoning among the latter the occasional criticisms of the omniscient Fadladeen, the magnificent and most infallible grand chamberlain of the haram—whose sayings and remarks, by the by, do not agree very well with the character which is assigned him—being for the most part very smart, snappish, and acute, and by no means solemn, stupid, and pompous, as one would have expected. Mr Moore's genius, perhaps, is too inveterately lively, to make it possible for him even to counterfeit dulness. We must now take a slight glance at the poetry.

The first piece, entitled the Veiled Prophet of Khorassan, is the longest, and, we think, certainly not the best of the series. The story, which is not in all its parts extremely intelligible, is founded on a vision, in d'Herbelot, of a daring impostor of the early ages of Islamism, who pretended to have received a later and more authoritative mission than that of the Prophet, and to be destined to overturn all tyrannies and superstitions on the earth, and to rescue all souls that believed in him. To shade the celestial radiance of his brow, he always wore a veil of silver gauze, and was at last attacked by the Caliph, and exterminated with all his adherents. On this story Mr Moore has engrafted a romantic and not very probable tale: yet, even with all its faults, it possesses a charm almost irresistible, in the volume of sweet sounds and beautiful images, which are heaped together with luxurious profusion in the general texture of the style, and invest even the faults of the story with the graceful amplitude of their rich and figured veil.

¹ Milton, who was much patronized by the illustrious House of Egerton, wrote the Mask of Comus upon John Egerton, then Earl of Bridgewater, when that nobleman, in 1634, was appointed Lord President of the principality of Wales. It was performed by three of his Lordship's children, before the Earl, at Ludlow Castle.—See the Works of the present Earl of Bridgewater.

«Paradise and the Peri» has none of the faults just alluded to. It is full of spirit, elegance, and beauty; and, though slight in its structure, breathes throughout a most pure and engaging morality. «The Fire-worshippers» appears to us to be indisputably the finest and most powerful poem of them all. With all the richness and beauty of diction that belong to the best parts of Mokanna, it has a far more interesting story; and is not liable to the objections that arise against the contrivance and structure of the leading poem. The general tone of the Fire-worshippers is certainly too much strained, but, in spite of that, it is a work of great genius and beauty; and not only delights the fancy by its general brilliancy and spirit, but moves all the tender and noble feelings with a deep and powerful agitation.

The last piece, entitled «The Light of the Haram,» is the gayest of the whole; and is of a very slender fabric as to fable or invention. In truth, it has scarcely any story at all; but is made up almost entirely of beautiful songs and fascinating descriptions.

On the whole, it may be said of «Lalla Rookh,» that its great fault consists in its profuse finery; but it should be observed, that this finery is not the vulgar ostentation which so often disguises poverty or meanness—but, as we have before hinted, the extravagance of excessive wealth. Its great charm is in the inexhaustible copiousness of its imagery—the sweetness and ease of its diction—and the beauty of the objects and sentiments with which it is conceived.

Whatever popularity Mr Moore may have acquired as the author of Lalla Rookh, etc., it is as the author of the “Irish Melodies” that he will go down to posterity unrivalled and alone in that delightful species of composition. Lord Byron has very justly and prophetically observed, that “Moore is one of the few writers who will survive the age in which he so deservedly flourishes. He will live in his ‘Irish Melodies’; they will go down to posterity with the music; both will last as long as Ireland, or as music and poetry.”

If, indeed, the anticipation of lasting celebrity be the chief pleasure for the attainment of which poets bestow their labour, certainly no one can have engaged so much of it as Thomas Moore. It is evident that writers who fail to command immediate attention, and who look only to posterity for a just estimate of their merits, must feel more or less uncertainty as to the ultimate result, even though they should appreciate their own productions as highly as Milton his Paradise Lost; while they who succeed in obtaining a large share of present applause, cannot but experience frequent misgivings as to its probable duration: prevailing tastes have so entirely changed, and works, the wonder and delight of one generation, have been so completely forgotten in the next, that extent of reputation ought rather to alarm than assure an author in respect to his future fame.

But Mr Moore, independently of poetical powers of the highest order—independently of the place he at present maintains in the public estimation—has secured to himself a strong hold of celebrity, as durable as the English tongue.

Almost every European nation has a kind of primitive music, peculiar to itself; [consisting of short and simple tunes or melodies, which at the same time that they please cultivated and scientific ears, are the object of passionate and almost exclusive attainment by the great body of the people, constituting, in fact, pretty nearly the sum of their musical knowledge and enjoyment. Being the first sounds with which the infant is soothed in his nursery, with which he is lulled to repose at night, and excited to animation in the day, they make an impression on the imagination that can never afterwards be effaced, and are consequently handed down from parent to child, from generation to generation, with as much uniformity as the family features and dispositions. It is evident, therefore, that he who first successfully invests them with language, becomes thereby himself a component part of these airy existences, and commits his bark to a favouring wind, before which it shall pass on to the end of the stream of time.
b.

Without such a connexion as this with the national music of Scotland, it seems to us, that Allan Ramsay's literary existence must have terminated its earthly career long since; but, in the divine melody of "The Yellow-hair'd Laddie," he has secured a passport to future ages, which mightier poets might envy, and which will be heard and acknowledged as long as the world has ears to hear.

This is not a mere fancy of the uninitiated, or the barbarous exaggeration of a musical savage who has lost his senses at hearing Orpheus's hurdy gurdy, because he never heard any thing better. One of the greatest composers that ever charmed the world—the immortal Haydn—on being requested to add symphonies and accompaniments to the Scotch airs, was so convinced of their durability, that he replied—"Mi vanto di questo lavoro, e per cio mi lusingo di vivere in Scozia molti anni dopo la mia morte."

It is not without reason, therefore, that Mr Moore indulges in this kind of second-sight, and exclaims (on hearing one of his own melodies re-echoed from a bugle in the mountains of Killarney),

Oh, forgive if, while listening to music, whose breath
Seem'd to circle his name with a charm against death,
He should feel a proud spirit within him proclaim,
Even so shalt thou live in the echoes of fame ;
Even so, though thy mem'ry should now die away,
'T will be caught up again in some happier day,
And the hearts and the voices of Erin prolong,
Through the answering future, thy name and thy song !

In truth, the subtle essences of these tunes present no object upon which time or violence can act. Pyramids may moulder away, and bronzes be decomposed; but the breeze of heaven which fanned them in their splendour shall sigh around them in decay, and by its mournful sound awaken all the recollections of their former glory. Thus, when generations shall have sunk into the grave, and printed volumes been consigned to oblivion, traditionary strains shall prolong our poet's existence, and his future fame shall not be less certain than his present celebrity.

Like the gale that sighs along
Beds of oriental flowers,
Is the grateful breath of song,
That once was heard in happier hours;
Fill'd with balm the gale sighs on,
Though the flowers have sunk in death ;
So when the Bard of Love is gone,
His mem'ry lives in Music's breath !

Almost every European nation, as we before observed, has its own peculiar set of popular melodies, differing as much from each other in character as the nations themselves ; but there are none more marked or more extensively known than those of the Scotch and Irish. Some of these may be traced to a very remote era; while of others the origin is scarcely known; and this is the case, especially, with the airs of Ireland. With the exception of those which were produced by Carolan, who died in 1738, there are few of which we can discover the dates or composers.

That many of these airs possess great beauty and pathos, no one can doubt who is acquainted with the selections that have been made by Mr Moore; but as a genus or a style, they also exhibit the most unequivocal proofs of a rude and barbarous origin; and there is scarcely a more striking instance of the proneness of mankind to exalt the supposed wisdom of their ancestors, and to lend a ready ear to the marvellous, than the exaggerated praise which the authors of this music have obtained.

It is natural to suppose that in music, as in all other arts, the progress of savage man was gradual; that there is no more reason for supposing he should have discovered at once the seven notes of the scale, than that he should have been able at once to find appropriate language for all the nice distinctions of morals or metaphysics. We shall now pass to some interesting accounts of the Bards of the "olden time," which come within the scope of our subject when speaking of the present Bard of Erin, and his "Irish Melodies."

Dr Burney observes, that "the first Greek musicians were gods; the second, heroes; the third, bards; the fourth, beggars!" During the infancy of music in every country, the wonder and affections of the people were gained by surprise; but when musicians became numerous, and the art was regarded of easier acquirement, they lost their favour, and, from being seated at the tables of kings, and helped to the first cut, they were reduced to the most abject state, and ranked amongst rogues and vagabonds. That this was the cause of the supposed retrogradation of Irish music, we shall now proceed to show, by some curious extracts from contemporary writers.

The Bards, the earliest professors of whom we have not any account, having united to their capacity of musicians the function of priests, could not fail to obtain for themselves, in an age of ignorance and credulity, all the influence and respect which that useful and deserving class of men have never failed to retain, even among nations who esteem themselves the most enlightened. But the remotest period in which their character of musician was disengaged from that of priest is also the period assigned to the highest triumph of their secular musical skill and respectability. "It is certain," says Mr Bunting (in his Historical and Critical Dissertation on the Harp), "that the further we explore, while yet any light remains, the more highly is Irish border minstrelsy extolled."

"The oldest Irish tunes (says the same writer) are said to be the most perfect," and history accords with this opinion. Vin. Galilei, Bacon, Stanishurst, Spenser, and Camden, in the 16th century, speak warmly of Irish version, but not so highly as Polydore Virgil and Major, in the 15th, Clynne, in the middle of the 14th, or Fordun, in the 13th. As we recede yet further, we find Giraldus Cambrensis, G. Brompton, and John of Salisbury, in the 12th century, bestowing still more lofty encomiums; and these, again, falling short of the science among us in the 11th and 10th centuries. In conformity with this, Fuller, in his account of the Crusade conducted by Godfrey of Bologna, says, "Yea, we might well think that all the concert of Christendom in this war would have made no music, if the Irish Harp had been wanting."

In those early times the Irish bards were invested with wealth, honours, and influence. They wore a robe of the same colour as that used by kings; were exempted from taxes and plunder, and were billeted on the country from All-hallow-tide to May, while every chief bard had thirty of inferior note under his orders, and every second-rate bard fifteen.

John of Salisbury, in the 12th century, says, that the great aristocrats of his day imitated Nero in their extravagant love of fiddling and singing; that "they prostituted their favour by bestowing it on minstrels and buffoons; and that, by a certain foolish and shameful munificence, they expended immense sums of money on their frivolous exhibitions." "The courts of princes," says another contemporary writer, "are filled with crowds of minstrels, who extort from them gold, silver, horses, and vestments, by their flattering songs. I have known some princes who have bestowed on these minstrels of the Devil, at the very first word, the most curious garments, beautifully embroidered with flowers and pictures, which had cost them twenty or thirty marks of silver, and which they had not worn above seven days!"

From the foregoing account, by Salisbury John, the twelfth century must, verily, have been the true golden age for the sons of the lyre; who were then, it seems, clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. It is true, they were flatterers and parasites, and did "dirty work" for it in those days; but, at any rate, princes were then more generous to their poet-laureates, and the sackbut and the song were better paid for than in a simple butt of sack.

According to Stowe, the minstrel had still a ready admission into the presence of kings in the 4th century. Speaking of the celebration of the feast of Pentecost at Westminster, he says, "In the great hall, when sitting royally at the table, with his peers about him, there entered a woman adorned like a minstrel, sitting on a great horse, trapped as minstrels then used, who rode about the table showing pastime; and at length came up to the king's table, and laid before him a letter, and, forthwith turning her horse, saluted every one and departed: when the letter was read, it was found to contain animadversions on the king. The door-keeper, being threatened for admitting her, replied, that it was not the custom of the king's palace to deny admission to minstrels, especially on such high solemnities and feast-days."

In Froissart, too, we may plainly see what necessary appendages to greatness the minstrels were esteemed, and upon what familiar terms they lived with their masters. When the four Irish kings, who had submitted themselves to

Richard II. of England, were sat at table, "on the first dish being served they made their minstrels and principal servants sit beside them, and eat from their plates, and drink from their cups." The knight appointed by Richard to attend them having objected to this custom, on another day "ordered the tables to be laid out and covered, so that the kings sat at an upper table, the minstrels at a middle one, and the servants lower still. The royal guests looked at each other, and refused to eat, saying, that he deprived them of their good old custom in which they had been brought up."

However, in the reign of Edward II., a public edict was issued, putting a check upon this license, and limiting the number of minstrels to four per diem admissible to the tables of the great. It seems, too, that about this period the minstrels had sunk into a kind of upper servants of the aristocracy: they wore their lord's livery, and sometimes shaved the crown of their heads like monks.

When war and hunting formed almost the exclusive occupation of the great; when their surplus revenues could only be employed in supporting idle retainers, and no better means could be devised for passing the long winter evenings than drunkenness and gambling, it may readily be conceived how welcome these itinerant musicians must have been in baronial halls, and how it must have flattered the pride of our noble ancestors to listen to the eulogy of their own achievements, and the length of their own pedigrees.

Sir William Temple says, "the great men of the Irish septs, among the many officers of their family, which continued always in the same races, had not only a physician, a huntsman, a smith, and such like, but a poet and a tale-teller. The first recorded and sung the actions of their ancestors, and entertained the company at feasts; the latter amused them with tales when they were melancholy and could not sleep; and a very gallant gentleman of the north of Ireland has told me, of his own experience, that in his wolf-huntings there, when he used to be abroad in the mountains three or four days together, and lay very ill a-nights, so as he could not well sleep, they would bring him one of these tale-tellers, that when he lay down would begin a story of a king, a giant, a dwarf, or a damsel, and such rambling stuff, and continue it all night long in such an even tone, that you heard it going on whenever you awaked, and believed nothing any physicians give could have so good and so innocent an effect to make men sleep, in any pains or distempers of body or mind."

In the reign of Elizabeth, however, civilization had so far advanced, that the music which had led away the great lords of antiquity no longer availed to delude the human understanding, or to prevent it from animadverting on the pernicious effects produced by those who cultivated the tuneful art. Spenser, in his view of the state of Ireland, says, "There is amongst the Irish a certain kind of people called Bardes, which are to them instead of poets, whose profession is to set forth the praises or dispraises of men in their poems or rithmes; the which are had in so high regard and estimation among them, that none dare displease them, for fear to run into reproach through their offence, and to be made infamous in the mouths of all men. For their verses are taken up with a general applause, and usually sung at all feasts and meetings by certain other persons whose proper function that is, who also receive for the same great rewards and reputation amongst them. These Irish Bardes are, for the most part, so far from instructing young men in moral discipline, that themselves do more deserve to be sharply disciplined; for they seldom use to choose unto themselves the doings of good men for the arguments of their poems; but whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, most bold and lawless in his doings, most dangerous and desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition: him they set up and glorifie in their rithmes; him they praise to the people, and to young men make an example to follow." The moralizing poet then continues to show the "effect of evil things being decked with the attire of goodly words," on the affections of a young mind, which, as he observes, "cannot rest;" for, "if he be not busied in some goodness, he will find himself such business as shall soon busy all about him. In which, if he shall find any to praise him, and to give him encouragement, as those Bardes do for little reward, or a share of a stolen cow, then waxeth he most insolent, and half mad with the love of himself and his own lewd deeds. And as for words to set forth such lewdness, it is not hard for them to give a goodly and painted show thereunto, borrowed even from the praises which are proper to virtue itself; as of a most notorious thief and wicked outlaw, which had lived all his life-time of spoils and robberies, one of their bardes in his praise will say, that he was none of the idle milksops that was brought up to the fire-side; but that most of his days he spent in arms and valiant enterprises—that he did never eat his meat before he had won it with his sword; that he lay not all night in slugging in a cabin under his mantle, but used commonly to keep others waking to defend their lives; and did light his candle at the flames of their houses to lead him in the darkness; that the day was his night, and the night his day; that he loved not to be long wooing of wenches to yield to him, but, where he came, he took by force the spoil of other men's love, and left but lamentation to their lovers; that his music was not the harp, nor the lays of love, but the cries of people and the clashing of armour; and, finally, that he died, not bewailed of many, but made many wail when he died, that dearly bought his death."

It little occurred to Spenser that, in thus reprobating these poor bardes, he was giving an admirable analysis of the machinery and effects of almost all that poets have ever done!

In 1563 severe enactments were issued against these gentlemen, to which was annexed the following—"Item, for that those rhymers do, by their ditties and rhymes, made to dyvers lordes and gentlemen in Ireland, in the commendacion and highe praise of extortion, rebellion, rape, raven, and outhere injustice, encourage those lordes and gentlemen rather to follow those vices than to leve them, and for making of such rhymes, rewards are given by the said lordes and gentlemen; that for abolishinge of soo heynouse an abuse,” etc., etc.

The feudal system, which encouraged the poetical state of manners, and afforded the minstrels worthy subjects for their strains, received a severe blow from the policy pursued by Elizabeth. This was followed up by Cromwell, and consummated by King William, of Orange memory.

More recently a Scotch writer observes, “In Ireland the harpers, the original composers, and the chief depositories of that music, have, till lately, been uniformly cherished and supported by the nobility and gentry. They endeavoured to outdo one another in playing the airs that were most esteemed, with correctness, and with their proper expression. The taste for that style of performance seems now, however, to be declining. The native harpers are not much encouraged. A number of their airs have come into the hands of foreign musicians, who have attempted to fashion them according to the model of the modern music; and these acts are considered in the country as capital improvements.”

We have gone into the above details, not only because they are in themselves interesting and illustrative of the “Irish Melodies,” but because we fully coincide with the bard of “Childe Harold,” that the lasting celebrity of Moore will be found in his lyrical compositions, with which his name and fame will be inseparably and immortally connected.

Mr Moore possesses a singular facility of seizing and expressing the prevailing association which a given air is calculated to inspire in the minds of the greatest number of hearers, and has a very felicitous talent in making this discovery, even through the envelopes of prejudice or vulgarity. The alchemy by which he is thus accustomed to turn dross into gold is really surprising. The air which now seems framed for the sole purpose of giving the highest effect to the refined and elegant ideas contained in the stanzas "Sing, sing—music was given," has for years been known only as attached to the words of, "Oh! whack! Judy O'Flanagan, etc.," and the words usually sung to the tune of Cumilum are of the same low and ludicrous description. He possesses, also, in a high degree, that remarkable gift of a poetical imagination, which consists in elevating and dignifying the meanest subjects on which it chuses to expatiate:

As they, who to their couch at night
Would welcome sleep, first quench the light,
So must the hopes that keep this breast
Awake, be quench'd, ere it can rest.
Cold, cold my heart must grow,
Unchanged by either joy or woe,
Like freezing founts, where all that's thrown
Within their current turns to stone.

The ingenuity with which the above simile is applied, is not more remarkable than the success with which the homely image of putting out the bed-candle before we sleep, is divested of every particle of vulgarity.

In the same way, and with equal facility, the sudden revival of forgotten feelings, at meeting with friends from whom we have been long separated, is compared to the discovering, by the application of heat, letters written invisibly with sympathetic ink:

What soften'd remembrances come o'er the heart
In gazing on those we've been lost to so long!
The sorrows, the joys, of which once they were part,
Still round them, like visions of yesterday, throng.
As letters some hand hath invisibly traced,
When held to the flame will steal out to the sight,
So many a feeling that long seem'd effaced,
The warmth of a meeting like this brings to light.

“Rich and Rare,” taken music, words and all, is worth an epic poem to the Irish nation,—simple, tender, elegant, sublime, it is the very essence of poetry and music;—there is not one simile or conceit, nor one idle crotchet to be met with throughout.

The musical as well as the poetical taste of the author is evident in every line, nor is one allowed to shine at the expense of the other. Moore has composed some beautiful airs, but seems shy of exercising this faculty, dreading, perhaps, that success in that pursuit would detract from his poetical fame. The union of these talents is rare, and some have affirmed that they even exclude one another. When Gretry visited Voltaire at Ferney, the philosopher paid him a compliment at the expense of his profession: “Vous êtes musicien,” said Voltaire, “et vous avez de l’esprit: cela est trop rare pour que je ne prenne pas à vous le plus vif intérêt.” Nature certainly may be supposed not over-inclined to be prodigal in bestowing on the same object the several gifts that are peculiarly hers; but, as far as the assertion rests on experience, it is powerfully contradicted by the names of Moore and Rousseau.

The late Mr Charles Wolfe, having both a literary and a musical turn, occasionally employed himself in adapting words to national melodies, and in writing characteristic introductions to popular songs. Being fond of “The Last Rose of Summer” (IRISH MEL. No V), he composed the following tale for its illustration:

“This is the grave of Dermid:—He was the best minstrel among us all,—a youth of romantic genius, and of the most tremulous, and yet the most impetuous feeling. He knew all our old national airs, of every character and description: according as his song was in a lofty or a mournful strain, the village represented a camp or funeral; but if Dermid were in his merry mood, the lads and lasses hurried into a dance, with a giddy and irresistible gaiety. One day our chieftain committed a cruel and wanton outrage against one of our peaceful villagers. Dermid's harp was in his hand when he heard it:—with all the thoughtlessness and independent sensibility of a poet's indignation, he struck the chords that never spoke without response, and the detestation became universal. He was driven from amongst us by our enraged chief; and all his relations, and the maid he loved, attended the minstrel into the wide world. For three years there were no tidings of Dermid; and the song and the dance were silent; when one of our little boys came running in, and told us that he saw our minstrel approaching at a distance. Instantly the whole village was in commotion; the youths and maidens assembled on the green, and agreed to celebrate the arrival of their poet with a dance; they fixed upon the air he was to play for them; it was the merriest of his collection; the ring was formed; all looked eagerly to the quarter from which he was to arrive, determined to greet their favourite bard with a cheer. But they were checked the instant he appeared; he came slowly, and languidly, and loiteringly along; his countenance had a cold, dim, and careless aspect, very different from that expressive cheerfulness which marked his features, even in his more melancholy moments; his harp was swinging heavily upon his arm; it seemed a burthen to him; it was much shattered, and some of the strings were broken. He looked at us for a few moments, then, relapsing into vacancy, advanced without quickening his pace, to his accustomed stone, and sate down in silence. After a pause, we ventured to ask him for his friends;—he first looked up sharp in our faces, next down upon his harp; then struck a few notes of a wild and desponding melody, which we had never heard before; but his hand dropped, and he did not finish it.—Again we paused:—then knowing well that, if we could give the smallest mirthful impulse to his feelings, his whole soul would soon follow, we asked him for the merry air we had chosen. We were surprised at the readiness with which he seemed to comply; but it was the same wild and heart-breaking strain he had commenced. In fact, we found that the soul of the minstrel had become an entire void, except one solitary ray that vibrated sluggishly through its very darkest part; it was like the sea in a dark calm, which you only know to be in motion by the panting which you hear. He had totally forgotten every trace of his former strains, not only those that were more gay and airy, but even those of a more pensive cast; and he had gotten in their stead that one dreary simple melody; it was about a Lonely Rose, that had outlived all its companions; this he continued singing and playing from day to day, until he spread an unusual gloom over the whole village: he seemed to perceive it, for he retired to the churchyard, and continued repairing thither to sing it to the day of his death. The afflicted constantly resorted there to hear it, and he died singing it to a maid who had lost her lover. The orphans have learnt it, and still chaunt it over Dermid's grave."

"The Fudge Family in Paris" is a most humorous work, written partly in the style of "The Twopenny-Post Bag." These poetical epistles remind many persons of the Bath Guide, but a comparison can hardly be supported; the plan of Mr Moore's work being less extensive, and the subject more ephemeral. We pity the man, however, who has not felt pleased with this book; even those who disapprove the author's politics, and his treating Royalty with so little reverence, must be bigoted and loyal to an excess if they deny his wit and humour.

Mr Moore, in his preface to the "Loves of the Angels," states, that he had somewhat hastened his publication, to avoid the disadvantage of having his work appear after his friend Lord Byron's "Heaven and Earth;" or, as he ingeniously expresses it, "by an earlier appearance in the literary horizon, to give myself the chance of what astronomers call a heliacal rising, before the luminary, in whose light I was to be lost, should appear." This was an amiable, but by no means a reasonable modesty. The light that plays round Mr Moore's verses, tender, exquisite, and brilliant, was in no danger of being extinguished even in the sullen glare of Lord Byron's genius. One might as well expect an aurora borealis to be put out by an eruption of Mount Vesuvius. Though both bright stars in the firmament of modern poetry, they were as distant and unlike as Saturn and Mercury; and though their rising might be at the same time, they never moved in the same orb, nor met or jostled in the wide trackless way of fancy and invention.

Though these two celebrated writers in some measure divided the poetical public between them, yet it was not the same public whose favour they severally enjoyed in the highest degree. Though both read and admired in the same extended circle of taste and fashion, each was the favourite of a totally different set of readers. Thus a lover may pay the same attention to two different women; but he only means to flirt with the one, while the other is the mistress of his heart. The gay, the fair, the witty, the happy, idolize Mr Moore's delightful muse, on her pedestal of airy smiles or transient tears. Lord Byron's severer verse is enshrined in the breasts of those whose gaiety has been turned to gall, whose fair exterior has a canker within—whose mirth has received a rebuke as if it were folly, from whom happiness has fled like a dream! By comparing the odds upon the known chances of human life, it is no wonder that the admirers of his lordship's works should be more numerous than those of his more agreeable rival. We are not going to speak of any preference we may have, but we beg leave to make a distinction. The poetry of Moore is essentially that of fancy, the poetry of Byron that of passion. If there is passion in the effusions of the one, the fancy by which it is expressed predominates over it; if fancy is called to the aid of the other, it is still subservient to the passion. Lord Byron's jests are downright earnest; Mr Moore, when he is most serious, seems half in jest. The latter dallies and trifles with his subject, caresses and grows enamoured of it; the former grasped it eagerly to his bosom, breathed death upon it, and turned from it with loathing or dismay. The fine aroma that is exhaled from the flowers of poesy, every where lends its perfume to the verse of the bard of Erin. The noble bard (less fortunate in his muse) tried to extract poison from them. If Lord Byron cast his own views or feelings upon outward objects (jaundicing the sun), Mr Moore seems to exist in the delights, the virgin fancies of nature. He is free of the Rosicrucian society; and in etherial existence among troops of sylphs and spirits,—in a perpetual vision of wings, flowers, rainbows, smiles, blushes, tears, and kisses. Every page of his works is a vignette, every line that he writes glows or sparkles, and it would seem (to quote again the expressive words of Sheridan) “as if his airy spirit, drawn from the sun, continually fluttered with fond aspirations, to regain that native source of light and heat.” The worst is, our author’s mind is too vivid, too active, to suffer a moment’s repose. We are cloyed with sweetness, and dazzled with splendour. Every image must blush celestial rosy red, love’s proper hue;—every syllable must breathe a sigh. A sentiment is lost in a simile—the simile is overloaded with an epithet. It is “like morn risen on mid-noon.” No eventful story, no powerful contrast, no moral, none of the sordid details of human life (all is etherial); none of its sharp calamities, or, if they inevitably occur, his muse throws a soft, glittering, veil over them,

Like moonlight on a troubled sea,
Brightening the storm it cannot calm.

We do not believe that Mr Moore ever writes a line that in itself would not pass for poetry, that is not at least a vivid or harmonious common-place. Lord Byron wrote whole pages of sullen, crabbed prose, that, like a long dreary road, however, leads to doleful shades or palaces of the blest. In short

Mr Moore's Parnassus is a blooming Eden, and Lord Byron's a rugged wilderness of shame and sorrow. On the tree of knowledge of the first you can see nothing but perpetual flowers and verdure; in the last you see the naked stem and rough bark; but it heaves at intervals with inarticulate throes, and you hear the shrieks of a human voice within.

Critically speaking, Mr Moore's poetry is chargeable with two peculiarities: first, the pleasure or interest he conveys to us is almost always derived from the first impressions or physical properties of objects, not from their connexion with passion or circumstances. His lights dazzle the eye, his perfumes soothe the smell, his sounds ravish the ear; but then they do so for and from themselves, and at all times and places equally—for the heart has little to do with it. Hence we observe a kind of fastidious extravagance in Mr Moore's serious poetry. Each thing must be fine, soft, exquisite in itself, for it is never set off by reflection or contrast. It glitters to the sense through the atmosphere of indifference. Our indolent luxurious bard does not whet the appetite by setting us to hunt after the game of human passion, and is therefore obliged to hamper us with dainties, seasoned with rich fancy and the sauce piquante of poetic diction. Poetry, in his hands, becomes a kind of cosmetic art—it is the poetry of the toilet. His muse must be as fine as the Lady of Loretto. Now, this principle of composition leads not only to a defect of dramatic interest, but also of imagination. For every thing in this world, the meanest incident or object, may receive a light and an importance from its association with other objects, and with the heart of man; and the variety thus created is endless as it is striking and profound. But if we begin and end in those objects that are beautiful or dazzling in themselves and at the first blush, we shall soon be confined to a human reward of self-pleasing topics, and be both superficial and wearisome. It is the fault of Mr Wordsworth's poetry that he has perversely relied too much (or wholly) on this reaction of the imagination on subjects that are petty and repulsive in themselves, and of Mr Moore's, that he appeals too exclusively to the flattering support of sense and fancy. Secondly, we have remarked that Mr Moore hardly ever describes entire objects, but abstract qualities of objects. It is not a picture that he gives us, but an inventing of beauty. He takes a blush, or a smile, and runs on whole stanzas in ecstatic praise of it, and then diverges to the sound of a voice, and «discourses eloquent music» on the subject; but it might as well be the light of heaven that he is describing, or the voice of echo—We have no human figure before us, no palpable reality answering to any substantive form or nature. Hence we think it may be explained why it is that our author has so little picturesque effect—with such vividness of conception, such insatiable ambition after ornament, and such an inexhaustible and delightful play of fancy. Mr Moore is a colourist in poetry, a musician also, and has a heart full of tenderness and susceptibility for all that is delightful and amiable in itself, and that does not require the ordeal of suffering, of crime, or of deep thought, to stamp it with a bold character. In this we conceive consists the charm of his poetry, which all the world feels, but which it is difficult to explain scientifically, and in conformity to transcendant rules. It has the charm of the softest and most brilliant execution; there is no wrinkle, no deformity on its smooth and shining surface. It has the charm which arises from the continual desire to please, and from the spontaneous sense of pleasure in the author's mind. Without being gross in the smallest degree, it is voluptuous in the highest. It is a sort of sylph-like spiritualised sensuality. So far from being licentious in his Lalla Rookh, Mr Moore has become moral and sentimental (indeed he was always the last), and tantalizes his young and fair readers with the glittering shadows and mystic adumbrations of evanescent delights. He, in fine, in his courtship of the Muses, resembles those lovers who always say the softest things on all occasions; who smile with irresistible good humour at their own success; who banish pain and truth from their thoughts, and who impart the delight they feel in themselves unconsciously to others! Mr Moore's poetry is the thornless rose—its touch is velvet, its hue vermilion, and its graceful form is cast in beauty's mould. Lord Byron's, on the contrary, is a prickly bramble, or sometimes a deadly upas, of form uncouth and uninviting, that has its root in the clefts of the rock, and its head mocking the skies, that wars with the thunder-cloud and tempest, and round which the loud cataracts roar.

We here conclude our Sketch of

Anacreon Moore,
To whom the Lyre and Laurels have been given,
With all the trophies of triumphant song—
He won them well, and may he wear them long!

ORIENTAL ROMANCE

LALLA ROOKH, AN ORIENTAL ROMANCE.

VOL. I.

I

TAIYU BOOKS

ORIENTAL ROMANCE

Vol. I

TO
SAMUEL ROGERS, Esq.

THIS POEM IS DEDICATED,

BY HIS VERY GRATEFUL

AND AFFECTIONATE FRIEND,

THOMAS MOORE.

May 19, 1817.

TO
SAMUEL ROGERS, Esq.

THIS POEM IS DEDICATED

BY HIS VERY GRATEFUL

AND AFFECTIONATE FRIEND

THOMAS MOORE

May 9. 1817

LALLA ROOKH.

IN the eleventh year of the reign of Aurungzebe, Abdalla, King of the Lesser Bucharía, a lineal descendant from the Great Zingis, having abdicated the throne in favour of his son, set out on a pilgrimage to the Shrine of the Prophet; and, passing into India through the delightful valley of Cashmere, rested for a short time at Delhi on his way. He was entertained by Aurungzebe in a style of magnificent hospitality, worthy alike of the visitor and the host, and was afterwards escorted with the same splendour to Surat, where he embarked for Arabia. During the stay of the Royal Pilgrim at Delhi, a marriage was agreed upon between the Prince, his son, and the youngest daughter of the Emperor, LALLA ROOKH;*

* Tulip Cheek.

a Princess described by the poets of her time, as more beautiful than Leila, Shirine, Dewildé, or any of those heroines whose names and loves embellish the songs of Persia and Hindostan. It was intended that the nuptials should be celebrated at Cashmere; where the young King, as soon as the cares of empire would permit, was to meet, for the first time, his lovely bride, and, after a few months' repose in that enchanting valley, conduct her over the snowy hills into Bucharia.

The day of LALLA ROOKH's departure from Delhi was as splendid as sunshine and pageantry could make it. The bazaars and baths were all covered with the richest tapestry; hundreds of gilded barges upon the Jumna floated with their banners shining in the water; while through the streets groups of beautiful children went strewing the most delicious flowers around, as in that Persian festival called the Scattering of the Roses;* till every part of the city was as fragrant as if a caravan of musk from Khoten had passed through it. The Princess, having taken leave of her kind father, who at parting hung a cornelian of Yemen round her neck, on which was inscribed a verse from the Koran,—and having sent a considerable present to the Fakirs, who kept up the Perpetual Lamp in her sister's tomb, meekly ascended the palankeen prepared for her; and, while Aurungzebe stood to take a last look from his balcony, the procession moved slowly on the road to Lahore.

* Gul Reazee.

Seldom had the Eastern world seen a cavalcade so superb. From the gardens in the suburbs to the Imperial palace, it was one unbroken line of splendour. The gallant appearance of the Rajas and Mogul lords, distinguished by those insignia of the Emperor's favour, the feathers of the egret of Cashmere in their turbans, and the small silver-rimmed kettle-drums at the bows of their saddles;—the costly armour of their cavaliers, who vied, on this occasion, with the guards of the great Keder Khan, in the brightness of their silver battle-axes and the massiness of their maces of gold;—the glittering of the gilt pine-apples on the tops of the palankeens;—the embroidered trappings of the elephants, bearing on their backs small turrets, in the shape of little antique temples, within which the Ladies of LALLA ROOKH lay, as it were, enshrined;—the rose-coloured veils of the Princess's own sumptuous litter, at the front of which a fair young female slave sat fanning her through the curtains, with feathers of the Argus pheasant's wing ;—and the lovely troop of the Tartarian and Cashmerian maids of honour, whom young King had sent to accompany his bride, and who rode on each side of the litter, upon small Arabian horses ;—all was brilliant, tasteful, and magnificent, and pleased even the critical and fastidious FADLADEEN, Great Nazir or Chamberlain of the Haram, who was borne in his palanquin immediately after the Princess, and considered himself not the least important personage of the pageant.

FADLADEEN was a judge of every thing,—from the penciling of a Circassian's eye-lids to the deepest questions of science and literature ; from the mixture of a conserve of rose-leaves to the composition of an epic poem : and such influence had his opinion upon the various tastes of the day, that all the cooks and poets of Delhi stood in awe of him. His political conduct and opinions were founded upon that line of Sadi,—“ Should the Prince at noon-day say, It is night, declare that you behold the moon and stars.”—And his zeal for religion, of which Aurungzebe was a munificent protector, was about as disinterested as that of the goldsmith who fell in love with the diamond eyes of the idol of Jaghernaut.

During the first days of their journey, LALLA ROOKH, who had passed all her life within the shadow of the Royal Gardens of Delhi, found enough in the beauty of the scenery through which they passed to interest her mind and delight her imagination; and when, at evening or in the heat of the day, they turned off from the high road to those retired and romantic places which had been selected for her encampments,—sometimes on the banks of a small rivulet, as clear as the waters of the Lake of Pearl; sometimes under the sacred shade of a Banyan tree, from which the view opened upon a glade covered with antelopes; and often in those hidden, embowered spots, described by one from the Isles of the West, as “places of melancholy, delight, and safety, where all the company around was wild peacocks and turtle-doves;”—she felt a charm in these scenes, so lovely and so new to her, which, for a time, made her indifferent to every other amusement. But LALLA ROOKH was young, and the young love variety; nor could the conversation of her Ladies and the Great Chamberlain, FADLADEEN (the only persons, of course, admitted to her pavilion), sufficiently enliven those many vacant hours, which were devoted neither to the pillow nor the palankeen. There was a little Persian slave who sung sweetly to the Vina, and who, now and then, lulled the Princess to sleep with the ancient ditties of her country, about the loves of Wamak and Ezra, the fair-haired Zal and his mistress Rodahver; not forgetting the combat of Rustam with the terrible White Demon. At other times she was amused by those graceful dancing-girls of Delhi, who had been permitted by the Bramins of the Great Pagoda to attend her, much to the horror of the good Mussulman FADLADEEN, who could see nothing graceful or agreeable in idolators, and to whom the very tinkling of their golden anklets was an abomination.

But these and many other diversions were repeated till they lost all their charm, and the nights and noon-days were beginning to move heavily, when, at length, it was recollected that, among the attendants sent by the bridegroom, was a young poet of Cashmere, much celebrated throughout the Valley for his manner of reciting the Stories of the East, on whom his Royal Master had conferred the privilege of being admitted to the pavilion of the Princess, that he might help to beguile the tediousness of the journey by some of his most agreeable recitals. At the mention of a poet FADLADEEN elevated his critical eye-brows, and, having refreshed his faculties with a dose of that delicious opium which is distilled from the black poppy of the Thebais, gave orders for the minstrel to be forthwith introduced into the presence.

The Princess, who had once in her life seen a poet from behind the screens of gauze in her father's hall, and had conceived from that specimen no very favourable ideas of the Caste, expected but little in this new exhibition to interest her;—she felt inclined however to alter her opinion on the very first appearance of FERAMORZ. He was a youth about LALLA ROOKH's own age, and graceful as that idol of women, Crishna,*—such as he appears to their young imaginations, heroic, beautiful, breathing music from his very eyes, and exalting the religion of his worshippers into love. His dress was simple, yet not without some marks of costliness, and the Ladies of the Princess were not long in discovering that the cloth, which encircled his high Tartarian cap, was of the most delicate kind that the shawl-goats of Tibet supply. Here and there, too, over his vest, which was confined by a flowered girdle of Kas-han, hung strings of fine pearl, disposed with an air of studied negligence ;—nor did the exquisite embroidery of his sandals escape the observation of these fair critics ; who, however they might give way to FADLADEEN upon the unimportant topics of religion and government, had the spirit of martyrs in every thing relating to such momentous matters as jewels and embroidery.

* The Indian Apollo.

For the purpose of relieving the pauses of recitation by music, the young Cashmerian held in his hand a kitar ;—such as, in old times, the Arab maids of the West used to listen to by moonlight in the gardens of the Alhambra — and, having premised, with much humility, that the story he was about to relate was founded on the adventures of that Veiled Prophet of Khorassan, who, in the year of the Hegira 163, created such alarm throughout the Eastern Empire, made an obeisance to the Princess, and thus began :—

THE VEILED PROPHET OF KHORASSAN.*

IN that delightful Province of the Sun,
The first of Persian lands he shines upon,
Where, all the loveliest children of his beam,
Flowrets and fruits blush over every stream,
And, fairest of all streams, the MURGA roves
Among MEROU'S† bright palaces and groves;—
There on that throne, to which the blind belief
Of millions raised him, sat the Prophet-Chief,
The Great MOKANNA. O'er his features hung
The Veil, the Silver Veil, which he had flung
In mercy there, to hide from mortal sight
His dazzling brow, till man could bear its light.
For, far less luminous, his votaries said,
Were ev'n the gleams, miraculously shed

* Khorassan signifies, in the old Persian language, Province, or Region of the Sun.—SIR W. JONES.

† One of the royal cities of Khorassan.

O'er MOUSSA's * cheek, when down the Mount he trod,
All glowing from the presence of his God !

On either side, with ready hearts and hands,
His chosen guard of bold Believers stands ;
Young fire-eyed disputants, who deem their swords,
On points of faith, more eloquent than words ;
And such their zeal, there's not a youth with brand
Uplifted there, but, at the Chief's command,
Would make his own devoted heart its sheath,
And bless the lips that doom'd so dear a death !
In hatred to the Caliph's hue of night, †
Their vesture, helms and all, is snowy white ;
Their weapons various ;—some equipp'd, for speed,
With javelins of the light Kathaian reed ;
Or bows of buffalo horn, and shining quivers
Fill'd with the stems § that bloom on IRAN'S rivers ;
While some, for war's more terrible attacks,
Wield the huge mace and ponderous battle-axe ;

* Moses.

† Black was the colour adopted by the Caliphs of the House of Abbas, in their garments, turbans, and standards.

§ Pichula, used anciently for arrows by the Persians.

And, as they wave aloft in morning's beam
The milk-white plumage of their helms, they seem Like a chenar-tree grove, when Winter throws
O'er all its tufted heads his feathering snows.

Between the porphyry pillars, that uphold
The rich moresque-work of the roof of gold,
Aloft the Haram's curtain'd galleries rise,
Where, through the silken net-work, glancing eyes,
From time to time, like sudden gleams that glow
Through autumn clouds, shine o'er the pomp below.—
What impious tongue, ye blushing saints, would dare
To hint that aught but Heaven hath placed you there?
Or that the loves of this light world could bind,
In their gross chain, your Prophet's soaring mind?
No—wrongful thought!—commission'd from above
To people Eden's bowers with shapes of love
(Creatures so bright, that the same lips and eyes
They wear on earth will serve in Paradise),
There to recline among Heaven's native maids,
And crown th' Elect with bliss that never fades!—
Well hath the Prophet-Chief his bidding done;
And every beauteous race beneath the sun,

From those who kneel at BRAHMA's burning founts*
To the fresh nymphs bounding o'er YEMEN's mounts ;
From PERSIA's eyes of full and fawn-like ray,
To the small, half-shut glances of KATHAY ; †
And GEORGIA's bloom, and AZAB's darker smiles,
And the gold ringlets of the Western Isles ;
All, all are there ;—each Land its flower hath given,
To form that fair young Nursery for Heaven !

But why this pageant now ? this arm'd array ?
—What triumph crowds the rich Divan to-day
With turban'd heads, of every hue and race,
Bowing before that veil'd and awful face,
Like tulip-beds, of different shape and dyes,
Bending beneath th' invisible West-wind's sighs !
What new-made mystery now, for Faith to sign,
And blood to seal, as genuine and divine,—
What dazzling mimicry of God's own power
Hath the bold Prophet plann'd to grace this hour ?
Not such the pageant now, though not less proud,—
Yon warrior youth, advancing from the crowd,

* The burning fountains of Brahma, near Chittogong, esteemed as holy.—TURNER.

† China.

With silver bow, with belt of broider'd crape,
And fur-bound bonnet of Bucharian shape,
So fiercely beautiful in form and eye,
Like war's wild planet in a summer sky ;—
That youth to-day,—a proselyte, worth hordes
Of cooler spirits and less practised swords,—
Is come to join, all bravery and belief,
The creed and standard of the Heaven-sent Chief.

Though few his years, the West already knows
Young AZIM's fame ;—beyond th' Olympian snows,
Ere manhood darken'd o'er his downy cheek,
O'erwhelm'd in fight and captive to the Greek,*
He linger'd there till peace dissolved his chains ;—
Oh ! who could, ev'n in bondage, tread the plains
Of glorious GREECE, nor feel his spirit rise
Kindling within him ? who, with heart and eyes,
Could walk where Liberty had been, nor see
The shining foot-prints of her Deity,
Nor feel those God-like breathings in the air,
Which mutely told her spirit had been there ?

* In the war of the Caliph Mahadi against the Empress Irene, for an account of which see GIBBON, vol. 8.

Not he, that youthful warrior,—no, too well
For his soul's quiet work'd th' awakening spell ;
And, now returning to his own dear land,
Full of those dreams of good that, vainly grand,
Haunt the young heart ;—proud views of human-kind,
Of men to Gods exalted and refined ;—
False views, like that horizon's fair deceit,
Where earth and heaven but seem, alas, to meet !—
Soon as he heard an Arm Divine was raised
To right the nations, and beheld, emblazed
On the white flag MOKANNA'S host unfurl'd,
Those words of sunshine, “ Freedom to the World ! ”
At once his faith, his sword, his soul obey'd
Th' inspiring summons ; every chosen blade,
That fought beneath that banner's sacred text,
Seem'd doubly edged—for this world and the next ;
And ne'er did Faith with her smooth bandage bind
Eyes more devoutly willing to be blind,
In Virtue's cause ;—never was soul inspired
With livelier trust in what it most desired,
Than his, th' enthusiast there, who kneeling, pale
With pious awe, before that Silver Veil,
Believes the form to which he bends his knee,
Some pure, redeeming angel, sent to free

This fetter'd world from every bond and stain,
And bring its primal glories back again!

Low as young Azim knelt, that motley crowd
Of all earth's nations sunk the knee and bow'd,
With shouts of "ALLA!" echoing long and loud;
While high in air, above the Prophet's head,
Hundreds of banners, to the sunbeam spread,
Waved, like the wings of the white birds that fan
The flying throne of star-taught SOLIMAN!
Then thus he spoke;—"Stranger, though new the "frame

"Thy soul inhabits now, I've track'd its flame
"For many an age,* in every chance and change
"Of that Existence, through whose varied range,—
"As through a torch-race, where, from hand to hand
"The flying youths transmit their shining brand,—
"From frame to frame the unextinguish'd soul
"Rapidly passes, till it reach the goal!

"Nor think 'tis only the gross Spirits, warm'd
"With duskier fire and for earth's medium form'd,

* The transmigration of souls was one of his doctrines:—
See D'HERBELOT.

“ That run this course ;—Beings, the most divine,
“ Thus deign through dark mortality to shine.
“ Such was the Essence that in ADAM dwelt,
“ To which all Heaven, except the Proud One, knelt: *
“ Such the refined Intelligence that glow’d
“ In MOUSSA’S frame ;—and, thence descending, flow’d
“ Through many a Prophet’s breast ;—in ISSA † shone,
“ And in MOHAMMED burn’d ; till, hastening on,
“ (As a bright river that, from fall to fall
“ In many a maze descending, bright through all,
“ Finds some fair region where, each labyrinth pass’d,
“ In one full lake of light it rests at last !)
“ That Holy Spirit, settling calm and free
“ From lapse or shadow, centers all in me ! ”

Again, throughout th’ assembly at these words,
—Thousands of voices rung ; the warriors’ swords
Were pointed up to heaven ; a sudden wind
In th’ open banners play’d, and from behind
Those Persian hangings, that but ill could screen
The Haram’s lovelines, white hands were seen

* “ And when we said unto the angels, Worship Adam, they all worshipped him except Eblis (Lucifer), who refused.”—The Koran, chap. ii.

† Jesus.

Waving embroider'd scarves, whose motion gave
A perfume forth ;—like those the Houris wave
When beckoning to their bowers th' Immortal Brave. }

“ But these,” pursued the Chief, “ are truths sublime,

“ That claim a holier mood and calmer time
“ Than earth allows us now ;—this sword must first
“ The darkling prison-house of Mankind burst, “ Ere Peace can visit them, or Truth let in “ Her wakening day-light on a world of sin !
“ But then, celestial warriors, then, when all
“ Earth's shrines and thrones before our banner fall ;
“ When the glad Slave shall at these feet lay down
“ His broken chain, the tyrant Lord his crown,
“ The Priest his book, the Conqueror his wreath,
“ And from the lips of Truth one mighty breath
“ Shall, like a whirlwind, scatter in its breeze
“ That whole dark pile of human mockeries ;—
“ Then shall the reign of Mind commence on earth,
“ And starting fresh, as from a second birth,
“ Man, in the sunshine of the world's new spring,
“ Shall walk transparent, like some holy thing !

“ Then, too, your Prophet from his angel brow
“ Shall cast the Veil, that hides its splendours now,
“ And gladden’d Earth shall, through her wide expanse,
“ Bask in the glories of this countenance !

“ For thee, young warrior, welcome !—thou hast yet
“ Some tasks to learn, some frailties to forget,
“ Ere the white war-plume o’er thy brow can wave ;—
“ But, once my own, mine all till in the grave !”

The Pomp is at an end,—the crowds are gone—
Each ear and heart still haunted by the tone
Of that deep voice, which thrill’d like ALLA’S own !
The Young all dazzled by the plumes and lances,
The glittering throne, and Haram’s half-caught glances ;
The Old deep pondering on the promised reign
Of peace and truth ; and all the female train
Ready to risk their eyes, could they but gaze
A moment on that brow’s miraculous blaze !

But there was one among the chosen maids
Who blush’d behind the gallery’s silken shades,
One, to whose scul the pageant of to-day
Has been like death ;—you saw her pale dismay,

Ye wondering sisterhood, and heard the burst
Of exclamation from her lips, when first
She saw that youth, too well, too dearly known,
Silently kneeling at the Prophet's throne.

Ah ZELICA! there was a time, when bliss
Shone o'er thy heart from every look of his ;
When but to see him, hear him, breathe the air
In which he dwelt, was thy soul's fondest prayer !
When round him hung such a perpetual spell,
Whate'er he did, none ever did so well.
Too happy days ! when, if he touch'd a flower
Or gem of thine, 'twas sacred from that hour ;
When thou didst study him till every tone
And gesture and dear look became thy own,—
Thy voice like his, the changes of his face
In thine reflected with still lovelier grace,
Like echo, sending back sweet music, fraught
With twice th' aërial sweetness it had brought !
Yet now he comes—brighter than even he
E'er beam'd before,—but ah ! not bright for thee ;
No—dread, unlook'd for, like a visitant
From th' other world, he comes as if to haunt

Thy guilty soul with dreams of lost delight,
Long lost to all but Memory's aching sight :—
Sad dreams ! as when the Spirit of our Youth
Returns in sleep, sparkling with all the truth
And innocence once ours, and leads us back,
In mournful mockery, o'er the shining track
Of our young life, and points out every ray
Of hope and peace we've lost upon the way !

Once happy pair !—in proud BOKHARA'S groves,
Who had not heard of their first youthful loves ?
Born by that ancient flood,* which from its spring
In the Dark Mountains swiftly wandering,
Enrich'd by every pilgrim brook that shines
With relics from BUCHARIA'S ruby mines,
And, lending to the CASPIAN half its strength,
In the cold Lake of Eagles sinks at length ;—
There, on the banks of that bright river born,
The flowers, that hung above the wave at morn,
Bless'd not the waters as they murmur'd by,
With holier scent and lustre, than the sigh

* The Amoo, which rises in the Belur Tag, or Dark Mountains, and, running nearly from east to west, splits into two branches, one of which falls into the Caspian sea, and the other into Aral Nahr, or the Lake of Eagles.

And virgin glance of first affection cast
Upon their youth's smooth current as it pass'd !
But war disturb'd this vision—far away
From her fond eyes, summon'd to join th' array
Of PERSIA'S warriors on the hills of THRACE,
The youth exchanged his sylvan dwelling-place
For the rude tent and war-field's deathful clash,—
His ZELICA'S sweet glances for the flash
Of Grecian wild-fire,—and Love's gentle chains
For bleeding bondage on BYZANTIUM'S plains.

Month after month, in widowhood of soul
Drooping, the maiden saw two summers roll
Their suns away—but, ah ! how cold and dim
Even summer suns, when not beheld with him !
From time to time ill-omen'd rumours came (Like spirit-tongues, muttering the sick-man's name,
Just ere he dies) ; at length, those sounds of dread
Fell withering on her soul, “ AZIM is dead ! ”
Oh grief, beyond all other griefs, when fate
First leaves the young heart lone and desolate
In the wide world, without that only tie
For which it loved to live or fear'd to die ;—

Lorn as the hung-up lute, that ne'er hath spoken
Since the sad day its master-chord was broken !

Fond maid, the sorrow of her soul was such,
Even reason sunk blighted beneath its touch ;
And though, ere long, her sanguine spirit rose
Above the first dead pressure of its woes,
Though health and bloom return'd, the delicate chain
Of thought, once tangled, never clear'd again.
Warm, lively, soft as in youth's happiest day,
The mind was still all there, but turn'd astray ;—
A wandering bark, upon whose pathway shone
All stars of heaven, except the guiding one !
Again she smiled, nay, much and brightly smiled,
But 'twas a lustre, strange, unreal, wild ;
And when she sung to her lute's touching strain,
'Twas like the notes, half extacy, half pain,
The bulbul* utters, ere her soul depart,
When, vanquish'd by some minstrel's powerful art,
She dies upon the lute whose sweetness broke her heart !

Such was the mood in which that mission found
Young ZELICA,—that mission, which around

* The nightingale.

The Eastern world, in every region bless'd
With woman's smile, sought out its loveliest,
To grace that galaxy of lips and eyes,
Which the Veil'd Prophet destined for the skies!—
And such quick welcome as a spark receives
Dropp'd on a bed of autumn's wither'd leaves,
Did every tale of these enthusiasts find
In the wild maiden's sorrow-blighted mind.
All fire at once the madd'ning zeal she caught;—
Elect of Paradise! blest, rapturous thought;
Predestined bride, in heaven's eternal dome,
Of some brave youth—ha! durst they say “of some?”
No—of the one, one only object traced
In her heart's core too deep to be effaced;
The one whose memory, fresh as life, is twined
With every broken link of her lost mind;
Whose image lives, though Reason's self be wreck'd,
Safe 'mid the ruins of her intellect!

Alas, poor ZELICA! it needed all
The fantasy, which held thy mind in thrall,
To see in that gay Haram's glowing maids
A sainted colony for Eden's shades;

Or dream that he,—of whose unholy flame
Thou wert too soon the victim,—shining came
From Paradise, to people its pure sphere
With souls like thine, which he hath ruin'd here !
No—had not Reason's light totally set,
And left thee dark, thou hadst an amulet
In the loved image, graven on thy heart,
Which would have saved thee from the tempter's art,
And kept alive, in all its bloom of breath,
That purity, whose fading is love's death !—
But lost, inflamed,—a restless zeal took place
Of the mild virgin's still and feminine grace ;—
First of the Prophet's favourites, proudly first
In zeal and charms,—too well th' Impostor nursed
Her soul's delirium, in whose active flame,
Thus lighting up a young, luxuriant frame,
He saw more potent sorceries to bind
To his dark yoke the spirits of mankind,
More subtle chains than hell itself e'er twined.
No art was spared, no witchery ;—all the skill
His demons taught him was employ'd to fill
Her mind with gloom and extacy by turns—
That gloom, through which Frenzy but fiercer burns ;

That extacy, which from the depth of sadness
Glares like the maniac's moon, whose light is madness!

'Twas from a brilliant banquet, where the sound
Of poesy and music breathed around,
Together picturing to her mind and ear
The glories of that heaven, her destined sphere,
Where all was pure, where every stain that lay
Upon the spirit's light should pass away,
And, realising more than youthful love
E'er wish'd or dream'd, she should for ever rove
Through fields of fragrance by her Azim's side,
His own bless'd, purified, eternal bride!—
'Twas from a scene, a witching trance like this,
He hurried her away, yet breathing bliss,
To the dim charnel-house ;—through all its steams
Of damp and death, led only by those gleams
Which foul Corruption lights, as with design
To show the gay and proud she too can shine!—
And, passing on through upright ranks of dead,
Which to the maiden, doubly crazed by dread,
Seem'd, through the bluish death-light round them cast,
To move their lips in mutterings as she pass'd—

There, in the awful place, when each had quaff'd
And pledged in silence such a fearful draught,
Such—oh! the look and taste of that red bowl
Will haunt her till she dies—he bound her soul
By a dark oath, in hell's own language framed,
Never, while earth his mystic presence claim'd,
While the blue arch of day hung o'er them both,
Never, by that all-imprecating oath,
In joy or sorrow from his side to sever.—
She swore, and the wide charnel echoed, “Never, never!”

From that dread hour, entirely, wildly given
To him and—she believed, lost maid!—to heaven;
Her brain, her heart, her passions all inflamed,
How proud she stood, when in full Haram named
The Priestess of the Faith!—how flash'd her eyes
With light, alas! that was not of the skies,
When round, in trances only less than hers,
She saw the Haram kneel, her prostrate worshippers!
Well might MOKANNA think that form alone
Had spells enough to make the world his own:—
Light, lovely limbs, to which the spirit's play
Gave motion, airy as the dancing spray,
When from its stem the small bird wings away!

Lips in whose rosy labyrinth, when she smiled,
The soul was lost, and blushes, swift and wild
As are the momentary meteors sent
Across th' uncalm, but beauteous firmament.
And then her look!—oh! where's the heart so wise,
Could unbewilder'd meet those matchless eyes?
Quick, restless, strange, but exquisite withal,
Like those of angels, just before their fall;
Now shadow'd with the shames of earth—now cross'd
By glimpses of the Heaven her heart had lost;
In every glance there broke, without control,
The flashes of a bright but troubled soul,
Where sensibility still wildly play'd,
Like lightning, round the ruins it had made!

And such was now young ZELICA—so changed
From her who, some years since, delighted ranged
The almond groves that shade BOKHARA's tide,
All life and bliss, with AZIM by her side!
So alter'd was she now, this festal day,
When, 'mid the proud Divan's dazzling array,
The vision of that Youth, whom she had loved,
And wept as dead, before her breathed and moved;—

When—bright, she thought, as if from Eden's track
But half-way trodden, he had wander'd back
Again to earth, glistening with Eden's light—
Her beauteous AZIM shone before her sight.

Oh Reason! who shall say what spells renew,
When least we look for it, thy broken clew!
Through what small vistas o'er the darken'd brain
Thy intellectual day-beam bursts again;
And how, like forts, to which beleaguers win
Unhoped-for entrance through some friend within,
One clear idea, wakened in the breast
By Memory's magic, lets in all the rest!
Would it were thus, unhappy girl, with thee!
But, though light came, it came but partially;
Enough to show the maze in which thy sense
Wander'd about,—but not to guide it thence;
Enough to glimmer o'er the yawning wave,
But not to point the harbour which might save.
Hours of delight and peace, long left behind,
With that dear form came rushing o'er her mind;
But oh! to think how deep her soul had gone
In shame and falsehood since those moments shone;

And then her oath—there madness lay again,
And, shuddering, back she sunk into her chain
Of mental darkness, as if bless'd to flee
From light, whose every glimpse was agony!
Yet, one relief this glance of former years
Brought, mingled with its pain,—tears, floods of tears,
Long frozen at her heart, but now like rills
Let loose in spring-time from the snowy hills,
And gushing warm, after a sleep of frost,
Through valleys where their flow had long been lost!

Sad and subdued, for the first time her frame
Trembled with horror, when the summons came (A summons proud and rare, which all but she,
And she, till now, had heard with extacy),
To meet MOKANNA at his place of prayer,
A garden oratory, cool and fair,
By the stream's side, where still at close of day
The Prophet of the Veil retired to pray;
Sometimes alone—but oftener far, with one,
One chosen nymph to share his orison.

Of late none found such favour in his sight
As the young Priestess; and though, since that night

When the death-caverns echoed every tone
Of the dire oath that made her all his own,
Th' Impostor, sure of his infatuate prize,
Had, more than once, thrown off his soul's disguise,
And utter'd such unheavenly, monstrous things,
As even across the desperate wanderings
Of a weak intellect, whose lamp was out,
Threw startling shadows of dismay and doubt ;—
Yet zeal, ambition, her tremendous vow,
The thought, still haunting her, of that bright brow
Whose blaze, as yet from mortal eye conceal'd,
Would soon, proud triumph ! be to her reveal'd,
To her alone ;—and then the hope, most dear,
Most wild of all, that her transgression here
Was but a passage through earth's grosser fire,
From which the spirit would at last aspire,
Even purer than before,—as perfumes rise
Through flame and smoke, most welcome to the skies—

And that when Azim's fond, divine embrace
Should circle her in heaven, no darkening trace
Would on that bosom he once loved remain,
But all be bright, be pure, be his again !—

These were the wildering dreams, whose cursed deceit }
Had chain'd her soul beneath the tempter's feet, }
And made her think even damning falsehood sweet. }
But now that Shape, which had appall'd her view,
That Semblance—oh how terrible, if true!—
Which came across her frenzy's full career
With shock of consciousness, cold, deep, severe,
As when, in northern seas, at midnight dark,
An isle of ice encounters some swift bark,
And startling all its wretches from their sleep,
By one cold impulse hurls them to the deep;—
So came that shock not frenzy's self could bear, }
And waking up each long-lull'd image there, }
But check'd her headlong soul, to sink it in despair ! }

Wan and dejected, through the evening dusk,
She now went slowly to that small kiosk,
Where, pondering alone his impious schemes,
MOKANNA waited her—too wrapt in dreams
Of the fair-ripening future's rich success,
To heed the sorrow, pale and spiritless,
That sat upon his victim's downcast brow,
Or mark how slow her step, how alter'd now

From the quick, ardent Priestess, whose light bound
 Came like a spirit's o'er th' unechoing ground,—
 From that wild ZELICA, whose every glance
 Was thrilling fire, whose every thought a trance!

Upon his couch the Veil'd MOKANNA lay,
 While lamps around—not such as lend their ray,
 Glimmering and cold, to those who nightly pray
 In holy KOOM,* or MECCA's dim arcades,—
 But brilliant, soft, such lights as lovely maids
 Look loveliest in, shed their luxurious glow
 Upon his mystic Veil's white glittering flow.
 Beside him, 'stead of beads and books of prayer,
 Which the world fondly thought he mused on there,
 Stood Vases, fill'd with KISHMEE's† golden wine,
 And the red weepings of the SHIRAZ vine;
 Of which his curtain'd lips full many a draught
 Took zealously, as if each drop they quaff'd,
 Like ZEMZEM's Spring of Holiness, § had power
 To freshen the soul's virtues into flower!

* The cities of Com (or Koom) and Cashan are full of mosques, mausoleums, and sepulchres of the descendants of Ali, the Saints of Persia.—CHARDIN.

† An Island in the Persian Gulf, celebrated for its white wine.

§ The miraculous well at Mecca; so called, says Sale, from the murmuring of its waters.

And still he drank and ponder'd—nor could see
Th' approaching maid, so deep his reverie ;
At length, with fiendish laugh, like that which broke
From EBLIS at the Fall of Man, he spoke :—
“ Yes, ye vile race, for hell's amusement given,
“ Too mean for earth, yet claiming kin with heaven ;
“ God's images, forsooth !—such gods as he “ Whom INDIA serves, the monkey deity ;—*
“ Ye creatures of a breath, proud things of clay,
“ To whom, if LUCIFER, as grandams say,
“ Refused, though at the forfeit of Heaven's light,
“ To bend in worship, LUCIFER was right !—
“ Soon shall I plant this foot upon the neck
“ Of your foul race, and without fear or check,
“ Luxuriating in hate, avenge my shame,
“ My deep-felt, long-nursed loathing of man's name !—
“ Soon, at the head of myriads, blind and fierce
“ As hooded falcons, through the universe
“ I'll sweep my darkening, desolating way,
“ Weak man my instrument, curst man my prey !

“ Ye wise, ye learn'd, who grope your dull way on
“ By the dim twinkling gleams of ages gone,

* The god Hannaman.

“ Like superstitious thieves, who think the light
 “ From dead men’s marrow guides them best at night*—

“ Ye shall have honours—wealth,—yes, Sages, yes—

“ I know, grave fools, your wisdom’s nothingness ;

“ Undazzled it can track yon starry sphere,

“ But a gilt stick, a bauble blinds it here.

“ How I shall laugh, when trumpeted along,

“ In lying speech, and still more lying song,

“ By these learn’d slaves, the meanest of the throng ;

“ Their wits bought up, their wisdom shrunk so small,

“ A sceptre’s puny point can wield it all !

“ Ye too, believers of incredible creeds,

“ Whose faith inshrines the monsters which it breeds ;

“ Who, bolder even than NEMROD, think to rise

“ By nonsense heap’d on nonsense to the skies ;

“ Ye shall have miracles, aye, sound ones too,

“ Seen, heard, attested, every thing—but true.

“ Your preaching zealots, too inspired to seek

“ One grace of meaning for the things they speak ;

* A kind of lantern formerly used by robbers, called the Hand of Glory, the candle for which was made of the fat of a dead malefactor. This, however, was rather a western than an eastern superstition.

“ Your martyrs, ready to shed out their blood
 “ For truths too heavenly to be understood ;
 “ And your State Priests, sole venders of the lore
 “ That works salvation ;—as on AVA’s shore
 “ Where none but priests are privileged to trade
 “ In that best marble of which Gods are made ; *—
 “ They shall have mysteries—aye, precious stuff
 “ For knaves to thrive by—mysteries enough ;
 “ Dark, tangled doctrines, dark as fraud can weave,
 “ Which simple votaries shall on trust receive,
 “ While craftier feign belief, till they believe. }
 “ A Heaven too ye must have, ye lords of dust,—
 “ A splendid Paradise,—pure souls, ye must :
 “ That Prophet ill sustains his holy call,
 “ Who finds not Heavens to suit the tastes of all ;
 “ Houris for boys, omniscience for sages,
 “ And wings and glories for all ranks and ages.
 “ Vain things !—as lust or vanity inspires,
 “ The Heaven of each is but what each desires,
 “ And, soul or sense, whate’er the object be,
 “ Man would be man to all eternity !
 “ So let him—EBLIS ! grant this crowning curse,
 “ But keep him what he is, no Hell were worse.”—

* SYMES’S Ava, vol. ii. p. 376.

“ Oh my lost soul ! ” exclaim’d the shuddering maid, }
Whose ears had drunk like poison all he said, — }
MOKANNA started—not abash’d, afraid, — }
He knew no more of fear than one who dwells
Beneath the tropics knows of icicles !
But, in those dismal words that reach’d his ear,
“ Oh my lost soul ! ” there was a sound so drear,
So like that voice, among the sinful dead,
In which the legend o’er Hell’s Gate is read,
That, new as ’twas from her, whom nought could dim
Or sink till now, it startled even him.

“ Ha, my fair Priestess ! ”—thus with ready wile,
Th’ Impostor turn’d to greet her—“ thou, whose smile “ Hath inspiration in its rosy beam
“ Beyond th’ Enthusiast’s hope or Prophet’s dream !
“ Light of the Faith ! who twinest religion’s zeal
“ So close with love’s, men know not which they feel,
“ Nor which to sigh for in their trance of heart,
“ The Heaven thou preachest or the Heaven thou art !
“ What should I be without thee ? without thee
“ How dull were power, how joyless victory !
“ Though borne by angels, if that smile of thine
“ Bless’d not my banner, ’twere but half divine.

- “ But—why so mournful, child? those eyes, that shone
“ All life last night—what!—is their glory gone?
“ Come, come—this morn’s fatigue hath made them pale,
“ They want rekindling—suns themselves would fail,
“ Did not their comets bring, as I to thee,
“ From Light’s own fount supplies of brilliancy!
“ Thou seest this cup—no juice of earth is here,
“ But the pure waters of that upper sphere,
“ Whose rills o’er ruby beds and topaz flow,
“ Catching the gem’s bright colour, as they go.
“ Nightly my Genii come and fill these urns—
“ Nay, drink—in every drop life’s essence burns;
“ ’Twill make that soul all fire, those eyes all light—
“ Come, come, I want thy loveliest smiles to-night:
“ There is a youth—why start?—thou saw’st him then;
“ Look’d he not nobly? such the god-like men
“ Thou’lt have to woo thee in the bowers above;—
“ Though he, I fear, hath thoughts too stern for love,
“ Too ruled by that cold enemy of bliss
“ The world calls Virtue—we must conquer this;—
“ Nay, shrink not, pretty sage; ’tis not for thee
“ To scan the mazes of Heaven’s mystery.

“ The steel must pass through fire ere it can yield
“ Fit instruments for mighty hands to wield.
“ This very night I mean to try the art
“ Of powerful beauty on that warrior’s heart.
“ All that my Haram boasts of bloom and wit,
“ Of skill and charms, most rare and exquisite,
“ Shall tempt the boy ;—young MIRZALA’S blue eyes,
“ Whose sleepy lid like snow on violets lies ;
“ AROUYA’S cheeks, warm as a spring-day sun,
“ And lips that, like the seal of SOLOMON,
“ Have magic in their pressure ; ZEBBA’S lute,
“ And LILLA’S dancing feet, that gleam and shoot
“ Rapid and white as sea-birds o’er the deep !
“ All shall combine their witching powers to steep
“ My convert’s spirit in that softening trance,
“ From which to Heaven is but the next advance ;
“ That glowing, yielding fusion of the breast,
“ On which Religion stamps her image best.
“ But hear me, Priestess !—though each nymph of these “ Hath some peculiar, practised power to please,
“ Some glance or step which, at the mirror tried,
“ First charms herself, then all the world beside ;
“ There still wants one, to make the victory sure,
“ One, who in every look joins every lure ;

“ Through whom all beauty’s beams concenter’d pass,
“ Dazzling and warm, as through love’s burning-glass ;
“ Whose gentle lips persuade without a word,
“ Whose words, even when unmeaning, are adored,
“ Like inarticulate breathings from a shrine,
“ Which our faith takes for granted are divine !
“ Such is the nymph we want, all warmth and light,
“ To crown the rich temptations of to-night ;
“ Such the refined enchantress that must be
“ This hero’s vanquisher,—and thou art she !”

With her hands clasp’d, her lips apart and pale,
The maid had stood, gazing upon the Veil
From which these words, like south-winds through a fence

Of Kerzrah flowers, came fill’d with pestilence : *
So boldly utter’d too ! as if all dread
Of frowns from her, of virtuous frowns, were fled,
And the wretch felt assured that, once plunged in,
Her woman’s soul would know no pause in sin !

* “ It is commonly said in Persia, that if a man breathe in the hot south-wind, which in June or July passes over that flower (the Kerzereh), it will kill him.”—THEVENOT.

At first, though mute she listen'd, like a dream
Seem'd all he said; nor could her mind, whose beam
As yet was weak, penetrate half his scheme. }

But when, at length, he utter'd "Thou art she!"
All flash'd at once, and, shrieking piteously,
"Oh not for worlds!" she cried—"Great God! to whom

"I once knelt innocent, is this my doom?"

"Are all my dreams, my hopes of heavenly bliss,

"My purity, my pride, then come to this,—

"To live, the wanton of a fiend! to be

"The pander of his guilt—oh infamy!

"And sunk, myself, as low as hell can steep

"In its hot flood, drag others down as deep!

"Others?—ha! yes—that youth who came to-day—

"Not him I loved—not him—oh! do but say,

"But swear to me this moment 'tis not he,

"And I will serve, dark fiend! will worship even thee!"

"Beware, young raving thing!—in time beware,

"Nor utter what I cannot, must not bear

"Even from thy lips. Go—try thy lute, thy voice,

"The boy must feel their magic—I rejoice

“ To see those fires, no matter whence they rise,
“ Once more illuming my fair Priestess’ eyes ;
“ And should the youth, whom soon those eyes shall warm,
“ Indeed resemble thy dead lover’s form,
“ So much the happier wilt thou find thy doom,
“ As one warm lover, full of life and bloom,
“ Excels ten thousand cold ones in the tomb. }
“ Nay, nay, no frowning, sweet ! those eyes were mead
“ For love, not anger—I must be obey’d.”

“ Obey’d !—’tis well—yes, I deserve it all—
“ On me, on me Heaven’s vengeance cannot fall
“ Too heavily—but AZIM, brave and true
“ And beautiful—must he be ruin’d too ?
“ Must he too, glorious as he is, be driven
“ A renegade like me from Love and Heaven ?
“ Like me ?—weak wretch, I wrong him—not like me ;
“ No—he’s all truth and strength and purity !
“ Fill up your madd’ning hell-cup to the brim,
“ Its witchery, fiends, will have no charm for him.
“ Let loose your glowing wantons from their bowers,
“ He loves, he loves, and can defy their powers !

- “ Wretch as I am, in his heart still I reign “ Pure as when first we met, without a stain !
“ Though ruin’d—lost—my memory, like a charm
“ Left by the dead, still keeps his soul from harm.
“ Oh ! never let him know how deep the brow
“ He kiss’d at parting is dishonour’d now—
“ Ne’er tell him how debased, how sunk is she,
“ Whom once he loved—once !—still loves dotingly !
“ Thou laugh’st, tormentor,—what !—thou’lt brand
 my name ?
“ Do, do—in vain—he’ll not believe my shame—
“ He thinks me true, that nought beneath God’s sky
“ Could tempt or change me, and—so once thought I.
“ But this is past—though worse than death my lot,
“ Than hell—’tis nothing, while he knows it not.
“ Far off to some benighted land I’ll fly,
“ Where sunbeam ne’er shall enter till I die ;
“ Where none will ask the lost one whence she came,
“ But I may fade and fall without a name !
“ And thou—curst man or fiend, whate’er thou art,
“ Who found’st this burning plague-spot in my heart,
“ And spread’st it—oh, so quick !—through soul and frame
“ With more than demon’s art, till I became “ A loathsome thing, all pestilence, all flame !—

“ If, when I’m gone——”

“ Hold, fearless maniac, hold,
 “ Nor tempt my rage—by Heaven not half so bold
 “ The puny bird that dares with teasing hum
 “ Within the crocodile’s stretch’d jaws to come! *
 “ And so thou’lt fly, forsooth?—what!—give up all “ Thy chaste dominion in the Haram Hall,
 “ Where now to Love and now to ALLA given,
 “ Half mistress and half saint, thou hang’st as even
 “ As doth MEDINA’S tomb, ’twixt hell and heaven!
 “ Thou’lt fly?—as easily may reptiles run
 “ The gaunt snake once hath fix’d his eyes upon;
 “ As easily, when caught, the prey may be “ Pluck’d from his loving folds, as thou from me.
 “ No, no, ’tis fix’d—let good or ill betide,
 “ Thou’rt mine till death, till death MOKANNA’S bride!
 “ Hast thou forgot thy oath?”—

At this dread word,
 The Maid, whose spirit his rude taunts had stirr’d
 Through all its depths, and roused an anger there,
 That burst and lighten’d even through her despair!—

* The ancient story concerning the Trochilus, or humming-bird, entering with impunity into the mouth of the crocodile, is firmly believed at Java.—BARROW’S Cochin-china.

Shrunk back, as if a blight were in the breath
That spoke that word, and stagger'd, pale as death.

“ Yes, my sworn Bride, let others seek in bowers
“ Their bridal place—the charnel-vault was ours !
“ Instead of scents and balms, for thee and me
“ Rose the rich steams of sweet mortality ;—
“ Gay, flickering death-lights shone while we were wed,
“ And, for our guests, a row of goodly dead
“ (Immortal spirits in their time no doubt),
“ From reeking shrouds upon the rite look'd out !
“ That oath thou heards't more lips than thine repeat—
“ That cup—thou shudderest, Lady—was it sweet ?
“ That cup we pledged, the charnel's choicest wine,
“ Hath bound thee—aye—body and soul all mine ;
“ Bound thee by chains that, whether bless'd or curst
“ No matter now, not hell itself shall burst !
“ Hence, woman, to the Haram, and look gay,
“ Look wild, look—any thing but sad ; yet stay—
“ One moment more—from what this night hath pass'd,
“ I see thou know'st me, know'st me well at last.

“ Ha! ha! and so, fond thing, thou thought'st all true,
 “ And that I love mankind!—I do, I do—
 “ As victims, love them; as the sea-dog doats
 “ Upon the small, sweet fry that round him floats;
 “ Or, as the Nile-bird loves the slime that gives
 “ That rank and venomous food on which she lives! *

“ And, now thou see'st my soul's angelic hue,
 “ 'Tis time these features were uncurtain'd too;—
 “ This brow, whose light—oh, rare celestial light!
 “ Hath been reserved to bless thy favour'd sight;
 “ These dazzling eyes, before whose shrouded might “ Thou'st seen immortal Man kneel down and quake—
 “ Would that they were Heaven's lightnings for his sake!

“ But turn and look—then wonder, if thou wilt,
 “ That I should hate, should take revenge, by guilt,
 “ Upon the hand, whose mischief or whose mirth
 “ Sent me thus maim'd and monstrous upon earth;
 “ And on that race who, though more vile they be “ Than mowing apes, are demi-gods to me!

* Circum easdem ripas (Nili, viz.) ales est Ibis. Ea serpentium populatur ova, gratissimamque ex his escam nidis suis refert.—SOLINUS.

“ Here—judge if Hell, with all its power to damn,
“ Can add one curse to the foul thing I am !”—

He raised his veil—the Maid turn'd slowly round,
Look'd at him—shriek'd—and sunk upon the ground !

ON their arrival, next night, at the place of encampment, they were surprised and delighted to find the groves all round illuminated; some artists of Yamtcheou having been sent on previously for the purpose. On each side of the green alley, which led to the Royal Pavilion, artificial sceneries of bamboo-work were erected, representing arches, minarets, and towers, from which hung thousands of silken lanterns, painted by the most delicate pencils of Canton. Nothing could be more beautiful than the leaves of the mango-trees and acacias, shining in the light of the bamboo scenery, which shed a lustre round as soft as that of the nights of Peristan.

LALLA ROOKH, however, who was too much occupied by the sad story of ZELICA and her lover, to give a thought to any thing else, except, perhaps, him who related it, hurried on through this scene of splendour to her pavilion,—greatly to the mortification of the poor artists of Yam-tcheou,—and was followed with equal rapidity by the Great Chamberlain, cursing, as he went, that ancient Mandarin, whose parental anxiety in lighting up the shores of the lake, where his beloved daughter had wandered and been lost, was the origin of these fantastic Chinese illuminations.

Without a moment's delay young FERAMORZ was introduced, and FADLADEEN, who could never make up his mind as to the merits of a poet, till he knew the religious sect to which he belonged, was about to ask him whether he was a Shia or a Sooni, when LALLA ROOKH impatiently clapped her hands for silence, and the youth, being seated upon the musnud near her, proceeded:—

PREPARE thy soul, young AZIM!—thou hast braved
The bands of GREECE, still mighty though enslaved;
Hast faced her phalanx, arm'd with all its fame,
Her Macedonian pikes and globes of flame;
All this hast fronted, with firm heart and brow,
But a more perilous trial waits thee now,—
Woman's bright eyes, a dazzling host of eyes
From every land where woman smiles or sighs;
Of every hue, as Love may chance to raise
His black or azure banner in their blaze;
And each sweet mode of warfare, from the flash
That lightens boldly through the shadowy lash,
To the sly, stealing splendors, almost hid,
Like swords half-sheathed, beneath the downcast lid.
Such, AZIM, is the lovely, luminous host
Now led against thee; and, let conquerors boast
Their fields of fame, he who in virtue arms
A young, warm spirit against beauty's charms,
Who feels her brightness, yet defies her thrall,
Is the best, bravest conqueror of them all.

Now, through the Haram chambers, moving lights
 And busy shapes proclaim the toilet's rites ;—
 From room to room the ready handmaids hie,
 Some skill'd to wreathe the turban tastefully,
 Or hang the veil, in negligence of shade,
 O'er the warm blushes of the youthful maid,
 Who, if between the folds but one eye shone,
 Like SEBA'S Queen could vanquish with that one :—*
 While some bring leaves of Henna, to imbue
 The fingers' ends with a bright roseate hue,†
 So bright, that in the mirror's depth they seem Like tips of coral branches in the stream ;
 And others mix the Kohol's jetty dye,
 To give that long, dark languish to the eye,§
 Which makes the maids, whom kings are proud to cull
 From fair CIRCASSIA'S vales, so beautiful.

All is in motion ; rings and plumes and pearls
 Are shining every where :—some younger girls

* “ Thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes.”—
Sol. Song.

† “ They tinged the ends of her fingers scarlet with Henna, so that they resembled branches of coral.”—Story of Prince Futtun in Bahardanush.

§ “ The women blacken the inside of their eye-lids with a powder named the black Kohol.”—RUSSEL.

Are gone by moonlight to the garden beds,
To gather fresh, cool chaplets for their heads ;
Gay creatures ! sweet, though mournful 'tis to see
How each prefers a garland from that tree
Which brings to mind her childhood's innocent day,

And the dear fields and friendships far away.
The maid of INDIA, blest again to hold
In her full lap the Champac's leaves of gold,*
Thinks of the time when, by the GANGES' flood,
Her little play-mates scatter'd many a bud
Upon her long black hair, with glossy gleam
Just dripping from the consecrated stream ;
While the young Arab, haunted by the smell
Of her own mountain flowers, as by a spell,—
The sweet Elcaya,† and that courteous tree
Which bows to all who seek its canopy—§

* “ The appearance of the blossoms of the gold-coloured Campac on the black hair of the Indian women, has supplied the Sanscrit poets with many elegant allusions.”—See Asiatic Researches, vol. iv.

† A tree famous for its perfume, and common on the hills of Yemen.—NIEBUHR.

§ Of the genus mimosa, “ which droops its branches whenever any person approaches it, seeming as if it saluted those who retire under its shade.”—NIEBUHR.

Sees, call'd up round her by these magic scents,
The well, the camels, and her father's tents ;
Sighs for the home she left with little pain,
And wishes even its sorrows back again !

Meanwhile, through vast illuminated halls,
Silent and bright, where nothing but the falls
Of fragrant waters, gushing with cool sound
From many a jasper fount, is heard around,
Young AZIM roams bewilder'd,—nor can guess
What means this maze of light and loneliness.
Here the way leads, o'er tessellated floors
Or mats of CAIRO, through long corridors,
Where, ranged in cassolets and silver urns,
Sweet wood of aloe or of sandal burns ;
And spicy rods, such as illume at night
The bowers of TIBET, * send forth odorous light,
Like Peris' wands, when pointing out the road
For some pure Spirit to its blest abode !—
And here, at once, the glittering saloon
Bursts on his sight, boundless and bright as noon ;

* “ Cloves are a principal ingredient in the composition of the perfumed rods, which men of rank keep constantly burning in their presence.”—TURNER'S Tibet.

Where, in the midst, reflecting back the rays
In broken rainbows, a fresh fountain plays
High as th' enamell'd cupola, which towers
All rich with arabesques of gold and flowers :
And the mosaic floor beneath shines through
The sprinkling of that fountain's silvery dew,
Like the wet, glistening shells, of every dye,
That on the margin of the Red Sea lie.

Here too he traces the kind visitings
Of woman's love, in those fair, living things
Of land and wave, whose fate—in bondage thrown
For their weak loveliness—is like her own !
On one side, gleaming with a sudden grace
Through water, brilliant as the crystal vase
In which it undulates, small fishes shine,
Like golden ingots from a fairy mine ;—
While, on the other, latticed lightly in
With odoriferous woods of COMORIN,*
Each brilliant bird that wings the air is seen ;—
Gay, sparkling loories, such as gleam between

* “ C'est d'où vient le bois d'aloès, que les Arabes appellent Oud Comari, et celui du sandal, qui s'y trouve en grande quantité.”—D'HERBELOT.

The crimson blossoms of the coral tree *
 In the warm isles of India's sunny sea :
 Mecca's blue sacred pigeon, † and the thrush
 Of Hindostan, § whose holy warblings gush,
 At evening, from the tall pagoda's top ;—
 Those golden birds that, in the spice time, drop
 About the gardens, drunk with that sweet food
 Whose scent hath lured them o'er the summer flood ; **
 And those that under ARABY's soft sun
 Build their high nests of budding cinnamon ;— ††
 In short, all rare and beauteous things, that fly
 Through the pure element, here calmly lie
 Sleeping in light, like the green birds §§ that dwell
 In Eden's radiant fields of asphodel !

* “ Thousands of variegated loories visit the coral trees.”—
 BARROW.

† “ In Mecca there are quantities of blue pigeons, which none will affright or abuse, much less kill.”—PITT's Account of the Mahometans.

§ “ The Pagoda Thrush is esteemed among the first choristers of India. It sits perched on the sacred pagodas, and from thence delivers its melodious song.”—PENNANT's Hindostan.

 Birds of Paradise, which, at the nutmeg season, come in flights from the southern isles to India; and “ the strength of the nutmeg,” says TAVERNIER, “ so intoxicates them that they fall dead drunk to the earth.”

†† “ That bird which liveth in Arabia, and buildeth its nest with cinnamon.”—BROWN's Vulgar Errors.

§§ “ The spirits of the martyrs will be lodged in the crops of green birds.”—GIBBON, vol. ix. p. 421.

So on, through scenes past all imagining,—
More like the luxuries of that impious King, *
Whom Death's dark Angel, with his lightning torch,
Struck down and blasted even in pleasure's porch,
Than the pure dwelling of a Prophet, sent,
Arm'd with Heaven's sword, for man's enfranchisement—
Young AZIM wander'd, looking sternly round,
His simple garb and war-boots' clanking sound
But ill according with the pomp and grace
And silent lull of that voluptuous place !

“ Is this then,” thought the youth, “ is this the way
“ To free man's spirit from the deadening sway
“ Of worldly sloth ?—to teach him, while he lives,
“ To know no bliss but that which virtue gives,
“ And when he dies, to leave his lofty name
“ A light, a land-mark on the cliffs of fame ?
“ It was not so, land of the generous thought
“ And daring deed ! thy god-like sages taught ;
“ It was not thus, in bowers of wanton ease,
“ Thy Freedom nursed her sacred energies ;

* Shedad, who made the delicious gardens of Irim, in imitation of Paradise, and was destroyed by lightning the first time he attempted to enter them.

“ Oh ! not beneath th’ enfeebling, withering glow
“ Of such dull luxury did those myrtles grow,
“ With which she wreathed her sword, when she would dare
“ Immortal deeds ; but in the bracing air
“ Of toil,—of temperance,—of that high, rare,
“ Etherial virtue, which alone can breathe
“ Life, health, and lustre into Freedom’s wreath !
“ Who—that surveys this span of earth we press,
“ This speck of life in time’s great wilderness,
“ This narrow isthmus ’twixt two boundless seas,
“ The past, the future, two eternities !—
“ Would sully the bright spot or leave it bare,
“ When he might build him a proud temple there,
“ A name that long shall hallow all its space,
“ And be each purer soul’s high resting-place ?
“ But no—it cannot be, that one, whom God
“ Has sent to break the wizard Falsehood’s rod,—
“ A Prophet of the Truth, whose mission draws
“ Its rights from Heaven, should thus profane his cause
“ With the world’s vulgar pomps ;—no, no—I see—
“ He thinks me weak—this glare of luxury
“ Is but to tempt, to try the eaglet gaze
“ Of my young soul ;—shine on, ’twill stand the blaze !”

So thought the youth ;—but, even while he defied
This witching scene, he felt its witchery glide
Through every sense. The perfume breathing round
Like a pervading spirit ;—the still sound
Of falling waters, lulling as the song
Of Indian bees at sunset, when they throng
Around the fragrant NILICA, and deep
In its blue blossoms hum themselves to sleep ! *
And music too—dear music ! that can touch
Beyond all else the soul that loves it much—
Now heard far off, so far as but to seem
Like the faint, exquisite music of a dream ;—
All was too much for him, too full of bliss :
The heart could nothing feel, that felt not this.
Softened, he sunk upon a couch and gave
His soul up to sweet thoughts, like wave on wave
Succeeding in smooth seas, when storms are laid ;—
He thought of ZELICA, his own dear maid,
And of the time when, full of blissful sighs,
They sat and look'd into each other's eyes,
Silent and happy—as if God had given
Nought else worth looking at on this side heaven !

* “ My Pundits assure me that the plant before us (the Nilica) is their Sephalica, thus named because the bees are supposed to sleep on its blossoms.”—SIR W. JONES.

“ Oh my loved mistress ! whose enchantments still “ Are with me, round me, wander where I will—
“ It is for thee, for thee alone I seek
“ The paths of glory—to light up thy cheek
“ With warm approval—in that gentle look,
“ To read my praise, as in an angel’s book,
“ And think all toils rewarded, when from thee
“ I gain a smile, worth immortality !
“ How shall I bear the moment, when restored
“ To that young heart where I alone am Lord,
“ Though of such bliss unworthy,—since the best
“ Alone deserve to be the happiest !—
“ When from those lips, unbreathed upon for years,
“ I shall again kiss off the soul-felt tears,
“ And find those tears warm as when last they started,
“ Those sacred kisses pure as when we parted !
“ Oh my own life !—why should a single day,
“ A moment keep me from those arms away ?”

While thus he thinks, still nearer on the breeze
Come those delicious, dream-like harmonies,
Each note of which but adds new, downy links
To the soft chain in which his spirit sinks.

He turns him tow'rd the sound, and, far away
Through a long vista, sparkling with the play
Of countless lamps,—like the rich track which Day
Leaves on the waters, when he sinks from us ;
So long the path, its light so tremulous ;—
He sees a group of female forms advance,
Some chain'd together in the mazy dance
By fetters, forged in the green sunny bowers,
As they were captives to the King of Flowers ;—
And some disporting round, unlink'd and free,
Who seem'd to mock their sisters' slavery,
And round and round them still, in wheeling flight,
Went, like gay moths about a lamp at night ;
While others waked, as gracefully along
Their feet kept time, the very soul of song
From psaltery, pipe, and lutes of heavenly thrill,
Or their own youthful voices, heavenlier still !
And now they come, now pass before his eye,
Forms such as Nature moulds, when she would vie
With Fancy's pencil, and gave birth to things
Lovely beyond its fairest picturings !
Awhile they dance before him, then divide,
Breaking, like rosy clouds at even-tide

Around the rich pavilion of the sun,—
Till silently dispersing, one by one,
Through many a path that from the chamber leads
To gardens, terraces, and moonlight meads,
Their distant laughter comes upon the wind,
And but one trembling nymph remains behind,—
Beck'ning them back in vain, for they are gone,
And she is left in all that light alone ;
No veil to curtain o'er her beauteous brow,
In its young bashfulness more beauteous now ;
But a light, golden chain-work round her hair,
Such as the maids of YEZD and SHIRAZ wear,
From which, on either side, gracefully hung
A golden amulet, in th' Arab tongue,
Engraven o'er with some immortal line
From holy writ, or bard scarce less divine ;
While her left hand, as shrinkingly she stood,
Held a small lute of gold and sandal-wood,
Which once or twice she touch'd with hurried strain,
Then took her trembling fingers off again.
But when at length a timid glance she stole
At AZIM, the sweet gravity of soul
She saw through all his features calm'd her fear,
And, like a half-tamed antelope, more near,

Though shrinking still, she came ;—then sat her down
Upon a musnud's * edge, and, bolder grown,
In the pathetic mode of ISFAHAN †
Touch'd a preluding strain, and thus began :—

There's a bower of roses by BENDEMEER's § stream,
And the nightingale sings round it all the day long ;
In the time of my childhood 'twas like a sweet dream,
To sit in the roses and hear the bird's song.

That bower and its music I never forget,
But oft when alone, in the bloom of the year,
I think—is the nightingale singing there yet ?

Are the roses still bright by the calm BENDEMEER ?

No, the roses soon wither'd that hung o'er the wave,
But some blossoms were gather'd, while freshly they shone,

And a dew was distill'd from their flowers, that gave
All the fragrance of summer, when summer was gone.

* Musnuds are cushioned seats, usually reserved for persons of distinction.

† The Persians, like the ancient Greeks, call their musical modes or Perdas by the names of different countries or cities, as the mode of Isfahan, the mode of Irak, etc.

§ A river which flows near the ruins of Chilminar.

Thus memory draws from delight, ere it dies,
An essence that breathes of it many a year ;
Thus bright to my soul, as 'twas then to my eyes,
Is that bower on the banks of the calm BENDEMEER !

“ Poor maiden ! ” thought the youth, “ if thou wert sent,

“ With thy soft lute and beauty’s blandishment,
“ To wake unholy wishes in this heart,
“ Or tempt its truth, thou little know’st the art.
“ For though thy lip should sweetly counsel wrong,
“ Those vestal eyes would disavow its song.
“ But thou hast breathed such purity, thy lay
“ Returns so fondly to youth’s virtuous day,
“ And leads thy soul—if e’er it wander’d thence—
“ So gently back to its first innocence,
“ That I would sooner stop the unchain’d dove,
“ When swift returning to its home of love,
“ And round its snowy wing new fetters twine,
“ Than turn from virtue one pure wish of thine ! ”

Scarce had this feeling pass’d, when, sparkling through
The gently-open’d curtains of light blue

That veil'd the breezy casement, countless eyes,
Peeping like stars through the blue evening skies,
Look'd laughing in, as if to mock the pair
That sat so still and melancholy there—
And now the curtains fly apart, and in
From the cool air, 'mid showers of jessamine
Which those without fling after them in play,
Two lightsome maidens spring, lightsome as they
Who live in the air on odours, and around
The bright saloon, scarce conscious of the ground,
Chase one another, in a varying dance
Of mirth and languor, coyness and advance,
Too eloquently, like love's warm pursuit :
While she, who sung so gently to the lute
Her dream of home, steals timidly away,
Shrinking as violets do in summer's ray,—
But takes with her from AZIM's heart that sigh
We sometimes give to forms that pass us by
In the world's crowd, too lovely to remain,
Creatures of light we never see again !

Around the white necks of the nymphs who danced
Hung carcanets of orient gems, that glanced

More brilliant than the sea-glass glittering o'er
 The hills of crystal on the Caspian shore ; *
 While from their long, dark tresses, in a fall
 Of curls descending, bells as musical
 As those that, on the golden-shafted trees
 Of EDEN, shake in the Eternal Breeze, †
 Rung round their steps, at every bound more sweet,
 As 'twere th' extatic language of their feet !
 At length the chase was o'er, and they stood wreathed
 Within each other's arms ; while soft there breathed
 Through the cool casement, mingled with the sighs
 Of moonlight flowers, music that seem'd to rise
 From some still lake, so liquidly it rose ;
 And, as it swell'd again at each faint close,
 The ear could track, through all that maze of chords
 And young sweet voices, these impassion'd words :—

—

* “ To the north of us (on the coast of the Caspian, near Badku) was a mountain which sparkled like diamonds, arising from the sea-glass and crystals, with which it abounds.”—Journey of the Russian Ambassador to Persia, 1746.

† “ To which will be added the sound of the bells, hanging on the trees, which will be put in motion by the wind proceeding from the throne of God, as often as the blessed wish for music.”—SALE.

A Spirit there is, whose fragrant sigh
Is burning now through earth and air ;
Where cheeks are blushing, the Spirit is nigh,
Where lips are meeting, the Spirit is there !

His breath is the soul of flowers like these,
And his floating eyes—oh ! they resemble
Blue water-lilies,* when the breeze
Is making the stream around them tremble !

Hail to thee, hail to thee, kindling power !
Spirit of Love, Spirit of Bliss !
Thy holiest time is the moonlight hour,
And there never was moonlight so sweet as this.

By the fair and brave,
Who blushing unite,
Like the sun and wave,
When they meet at night !

By the tear that shows
When passion is nigh,
As the rain-drop flows
From the heat of the sky !

* The blue lotos, which grows in Cashmere and in Persia.

By the first love-beat
Of the youthful heart,
By the bliss to meet,
And the pain to part!

By all that thou hast
To mortals given,
Which—oh! could it last,
This earth were heaven!

We call thee hither, entrancing Power!
Spirit of Love! Spirit of Bliss!
Thy holiest time is the moonlight hour,
And there never was moonlight so sweet as this.

— — —

Impatient of a scene, whose luxuries stole,
Spite of himself, too deep into his soul,
And where, midst all that the young heart loves most,
Flowers, music, smiles, to yield was to be lost,
The youth had started up, and turn'd away
From the light nymphs and their luxurious lay,
To muse upon the pictures that hung round,—
Bright images, that spoke without a sound,
And views, like vistas into fairy ground.

}

But here again new spells came o'er his sense ;—
 All that the pencil's mute omnipotence
 Could call up into life, of soft and fair,
 Of fond and passionate, was glowing there :
 Nor yet too warm, but touch'd with that fine art
 Which paints of pleasure but the purer part ;
 Which knows even Beauty when half-veil'd is best,
 Like her own radiant planet of the west,
 Whose orb when half retired looks loveliest !
There hung the history of the Genii-King,
 Traced through each gay, voluptuous wandering
 With her from SABA'S bowers, in whose bright eyes
 He read that to be blest is to be wise ;— *
Here fond ZULEIKA † woos with open arms
 The Hebrew boy, who flies from her young charms,
 Yet, flying, turns to gaze, and, half undone,
 Wishes that Heaven and she could both be won !
 And here MOHAMMED, born for love and guile,
 Forgets the Koran in his MARY'S smile ;—

* For the loves of King Solomon (who was supposed to preside over the whole race of Genii), with Balkis, the Queen of Sheba or Saba, see D'HERBELOT, and the Notes on the Koran, chap. 2.

† The wife of Potiphar, thus named by the Orientals. Her Adventure with the Patriarch Joseph is the subject of many of their poems and romances.

Then beckons some kind angel from above
With a new text to consecrate their love ! *

With rapid step, yet pleased and lingering eye,
Did the youth pass these pictured stories by,
And hasten'd to a casement, where the light
Of the calm moon came in, and freshly bright
The fields without were seen, sleeping as still
As if no life remain'd in breeze or rill.
Here paused he, while the music, now less near,
Breathed with a holier language on his ear,
As though the distance, and that heavenly ray
Through which the sounds came floating, took away
All that had been too earthly in the lay. }
Oh ! could he listen to such sounds, unmoved,
And by that light—nor dream of her he loved ?
Dream on, unconscious boy ! while yet thou may'st ;
'Tis the last bliss thy soul shall ever taste.
Clasp yet awhile her image to thy heart,
Ere all the light, that made it dear, depart.
Think of her smiles as when thou saw'st them last,
Clear, beautiful, by nought of earth o'ercast ;

* The particulars of Mahomet's amour with Mary, the Coptic girl, in justification of which he added a new chapter to the Koran, may be found in GAGNIER'S Notes upon Abulfeda, p. 151.

Recal her tears, to thee at parting given,
Pure as they weep, if angels weep, in heaven!
Think in her own still bower she waits thee now,
With the same glow of heart and bloom of brow,
Yet shrined in solitude—thine all, thine only,
Like the one star above thee, bright and lonely!
Oh, that a dream so sweet, so long enjoy'd,
Should be so sadly, cruelly destroy'd!

The song is hush'd, the laughing nymphs are flown,
And he is left, musing of bliss, alone;—
Alone?—no, not alone—that heavy sigh,
That sob of grief, which broke from some one nigh—
Whose could it be?—alas! is misery found
Here, even here, on this enchanted ground?
He turns, and sees a female form, close veil'd,
Leaning, as if both heart and strength had fail'd,
Against a pillar near;—not glittering o'er
With gems and wreaths, such as the others wore,
But in that deep blue, melancholy dress,*
BOKHARA'S maidens wear in mindfulness
Of friends or kindred, dead or far away;—
And such as ZELICA had on that day

* "Deep blue is their mourning colour."—HANWAY.

He left her,—when, with heart too full to speak,
He took away her last warm tears upon his cheek.

A strange emotion stirs within him,—more
Than mere compassion ever waked before ;—
Unconsciously he opes his arms, while she
Springs forward, as with life's last energy,
But, swooning in that one convulsive bound,
Sinks, ere she reach his arms, upon the ground ;—
Her veil falls off—her faint hands clasp his knees—
'Tis she herself!—'tis ZELICA he sees!
But, ah, so pale, so changed—none but a lover
Could in that wreck of beauty's shrine discover
The once adored divinity! even he Stood for some moments mute, and doubtingly
Put back the ringlets from her brow, and gazed
Upon those lids, where once such lustre blazed,
Ere he could think she was indeed his own,
Own darling maid, whom he so long had known
In joy and sorrow, beautiful in both ;
Who, even when grief was heaviest—when loth
He left her for the wars—in that worst hour
Sat in her sorrow like the sweet night-flower, *

* The sorrowful nyctanthes, which begins to spread its rich odour after sun-set.

When darkness brings its weeping glories out,
And spreads its sighs like frankincense about!

“ Look up, my ZELICA—one moment show
“ Those gentle eyes to me, that I may know
“ Thy life, thy loveliness is not all gone,
“ But there, at least, shines as it ever shone.
“ Come, look upon thy AZIM—one dear glance,
“ Like those of old, were heaven! whatever chance
“ Hath brought thee here, oh! 'twas a blessed one!
“ There—my sweet lids—they move—that kiss hath run
“ Like the first shoot of life through every vein,
“ And now I clasp her, mine, all mine again!
“ Oh the delight—now, in this very hour,
“ When, had the whole rich world been in my power,
“ I should have singled out thee, only thee,
“ From the whole world's collected treasury—
“ To have thee here—to hang thus fondly o'er
“ My own best, purest ZELICA once more!”—

It was indeed the touch of those loved lips
Upon her eyes that chased their short eclipse,
And, gradual as the snow, at heaven's breath,
Melts off and shows the azure flowers beneath,

Her lids unclosed, and the bright eyes were seen
Gazing on his,—not as they late had been,
Quick, restless, wild, but mournfully serene ;
As if to lie, even for that tranced minute,
So near his heart, had consolation in it ;
And thus to wake in his beloved caress
Took from her soul one half its wretchedness.
But when she heard him call her good and pure,
Oh 'twas too much—too dreadful to endure !
Shuddering she broke away from his embrace,
And, hiding with both hands her guilty face,
Said, in a tone whose anguish would have riven
A heart of very marble, “ pure !—oh Heaven.”—

That tone—those looks so changed—the withering blight,
That sin and sorrow leave where'er they light—
The dead despondency of those sunk eyes,
Where once, had he thus met her by surprise,
He would have seen himself, too happy boy,
Reflected in a thousand lights of joy ;
And then the place, that bright unholy place,
Where vice lay hid beneath each winning grace

And charm of luxury, as the viper weaves
Its wily covering of sweet balsam-leaves ;— *
All struck upon his heart, sudden and cold
As death itself ;—it needs not to be told—
No, no—he sees it all, plain as the brand
Of burning shame can mark—whate'er the hand
That could from heaven and him such brightness sever,
'Tis done—to heaven and him she's lost for ever !
It was a dreadful moment ; not the tears,
The lingering, lasting misery of years
Could match that minute's anguish—all the worst
Of sorrow's elements in that dark burst
Broke o'er his soul, and, with one crash of fate,
Laid the whole hopes of his life desolate !

“ Oh ! curse me not,” she cried, as wild he toss'd
His desperate hand tow'ards heaven—“ though I am lost,
“ Think not that guilt, that falsehood made me fall,
“ No, no—'twas grief, 'twas madness did it all !
“ Nay, doubt me not—though all thy love hath ceased—
“ I know it hath—yet, yet believe, at least,

* “ Concerning the vipers, which Pliny says were frequent among the balsam-trees, I made very particular inquiry ; several were brought me alive, both to Yambo and Jidda.”—BRUCE.

“ That every spark of reason’s light must be “ Quench’d in this brain, ere I could stray from thee !
“ They told me thou wert dead—why, Azim, why
“ Did we not, both of us, that instant die
“ When we were parted ?—oh ! could’st thou but know
“ With what a deep devotedness of woe
“ I wept thy absence—o’er and o’er again
“ Thinking of thee, still thee, till thought grew pain,
“ And memory, like a drop that, night and day,
“ Falls cold and ceaseless, wore my heart away !
“ Didst thou but know how pale I sat at home,
“ My eyes still turn’d the way thou wert to come,
“ And, all the long, long night of hope and fear,
“ Thy voice and step still sounding in my ear—
“ Oh God ! thou would’st not wonder that, at last,
“ When every hope was all at once o’ercast,
“ When I heard frightful voices round me say
“ Azim is dead !—this wretched brain gave way,
“ And I became a wreck, at random driven,
“ Without one glimpse of reason or of Heaven—
“ All wild—and even this quenchless love within “ Turn’d to foul fires to light me into sin !
“ Thou pitiest me—I knew thou would’st—that sky
“ Hath nought beneath it half so lorn as I.

“ The fiend, who lured me hither—hist ! come near,
“ Or thou too, thou art lost, if he should hear—
“ Told me such things—oh ! with such devilish art,
“ As would have ruin’d even a holier heart—
“ Of thee, and of that ever-radiant sphere,
“ Where bless’d at length, if I but served him here,
“ I should for ever live in thy dear sight,
“ And drink from those pure eyes eternal light !
“ Think, think how lost, how madden’d I must be,
“ To hope that guilt could lead to God or thee !
“ Thou weep’st for me—do, weep—oh ! that I durst
“ Kiss off that tear ! but, no—these lips are curst,
“ They must not touch thee ; one divine caress,
“ One blessed moment of forgetfulness
“ I’ve had within those arms, and that shall lie,
“ Shrined in my soul’s deep memory till I die !
“ The last of joy’s last relics here below,
“ The one sweet drop, in all this waste of woe,
“ My heart has treasured from affection’s spring,
“ To soothe and cool its deadly withering !
“ But thou—yes, thou must go—for ever go ;
“ This place is not for thee—for thee ! oh no,
“ Did I but tell thee half, thy tortured brain
“ Would burn like mine, and mine go wild again !

“ Enough that Guilt reigns here—that hearts, once good,

“ Now tainted, chill’d, and broken, are his food.—

“ Enough, that we are parted—that there rolls

“ A flood of headlong fate between our souls,

“ Whose darkness severs me as wide from thee

“ As hell from heaven, to all eternity !”—

“ ZELICA ! ZELICA !” the youth exclaim’d,

In all the tortures of a mind inflamed

Almost to madness—“ by that sacred Heaven,

“ Where yet, if prayers can move, thou’lt be forgiven,

“ As thou art here—here, in this writhing heart,

“ All sinful, wild, and ruin’d as thou art !

“ By the remembrance of our once pure love,

“ Which, like a church-yard light, still burns above

“ The grave of our lost souls—which guilt in thee

“ Cannot extinguish, nor despair in me !

“ I do conjure, implore thee to fly hence—

“ If thou hast yet one spark of innocence,

“ Fly with me from this place,——”

“ With thee ! oh bliss,

“ ’Tis worth whole years of torment to hear this.

“ What ! take the lost one with thee ?—let her rove

“ By thy dear side, as in those days of love,

“ When we were both so happy, both so pure—
“ Too heavenly dream ! if there’s on earth a cure
“ For the sunk heart, ’tis this—day after day
“ To be the blest companion of thy way !—
“ To hear thy angel eloquence—to see
“ Those virtuous eyes for ever turn’d on me ;
“ And in their light, re-chasten’d silently,
“ Like the stain’d web that whitens in the sun,
“ Grow pure by being purely shone upon !
“ And thou wilt pray for me—I know thou wilt—
“ At the dim vesper hour, when thoughts of guilt
“ Come heaviest o’er the heart, thou’lt lift thine eyes,
“ Full of sweet tears, unto the darkening skies,
“ And plead for me with Heaven, till I can dare
“ To fix my own weak, sinful glances there ;
“ Till the good angels, when they see me cling
“ For ever near thee, pale and sorrowing,
“ Shall for thy sake pronounce my soul forgiven,
“ And bid thee take thy weeping slave to heaven !
“ Oh yes, I’ll fly with thee——”

Scarce had she said
These breathless words, when a voice, deep and dread
As that of MONKER, waking up the dead

From their first sleep— so startling 'twas to both—Rung through the casement near, “ Thy oath! thy oath !”

Oh Heaven, the ghastliness of that Maid's look!—
“ 'Tis he,” faintly she cried, while terror shook
Her inmost core, nor durst she lift her eyes,
Though through the casement, now, nought but the skies

And moon-light fields were seen, calm as before—

“ 'Tis he, and I am his—all, all is o'er—

“ Go—fly this instant, or thou'rt ruin'd too—

“ My oath, my oath, oh God! 'tis all too true,

“ True as the worm in this cold heart it is—

“ I am MOKANNA'S bride—his, AZIM, his—

“ The dead stood round us, while I spoke that vow,

“ Their blue lips echoed it—I hear them now!

“ Their eyes glared on me, while I pledged that bowl,

“ 'Twas burning blood—I feel it in my soul!

“ And the Veil'd Bridegroom—hist! I've seen to-night

“ What angels know not of—so foul a sight,

“ So horrible—oh! never may'st thou see

“ What there lies hid from all but hell and me!

“ But I must hence—off, off—I am not thine,

“ Nor Heaven's, nor Love's, nor aught that is divine—

“ Hold me not—ha ! think’st thou the fiends that sever “ Hearts, cannot sunder hands?—thus, then—for ever ! ”

With all that strength which madness lends the weak,

She flung away his arm ; and, with a shriek,—
Whose sound, though he should linger out more years
Than wretch e’er told, can never leave his ears,—
Flew up through that long avenue of light,
Fleetly as some dark, ominous bird of night
Across the sun, and soon was out of sight !

"Hold me not—let things at their own hands be free—

For I, like you, cannot stand—stand, stand, stand—

over!"

And then, with a low, low, low, low, low, low, low, low,

With all that strength which cannot be denied,

With all that strength which cannot be denied,

She sang as if his hand, with a subtle, subtle,

It rose and, though he would linger out more years

Than youth ever told, on a far more distant shore

Blow up enough that long stream of light—

That is as sure as, omniscient, and right—

Across the sea, and soon was out of sight—

And then, with a low, low, low, low, low, low, low, low,

With all that strength which cannot be denied,

With all that strength which cannot be denied,

She sang as if his hand, with a subtle, subtle,

It rose and, though he would linger out more years

Than youth ever told, on a far more distant shore

Blow up enough that long stream of light—

That is as sure as, omniscient, and right—

Across the sea, and soon was out of sight—

And then, with a low, low, low, low, low, low, low, low,

With all that strength which cannot be denied,

With all that strength which cannot be denied,

LALLA ROOKH could think of nothing all day but the misery of these two young lovers. Her gaiety was gone, and she looked pensively even upon FADLADEEN. She felt too, without knowing why, a sort of uneasy pleasure in imagining that AZIM must have been just such a youth as FERAMORZ ; just as worthy to enjoy all the blessings, without any of the pangs of that illusive passion, which too often, like the sunny apples of Istkahar, is all sweetness on one side, and all bitterness on the other.

As they passed along a sequestered river after sun-set, they saw a young Hindoo girl upon the bank, whose employment seemed to them so strange, that they stopped their palankeens to observe her. She had lighted a small lamp, filled with oil of cocoa, and placing it in an earthen dish, adorned with a wreath of flowers, had committed it with a trembling hand to the stream, and was now anxiously watching its progress down the current, heedless of the gay cavalcade which had drawn up beside her. LALLA ROOKH was all curiosity;—when one of her attendants, who had lived upon the banks of the Ganges (where this ceremony is so frequent, that often, in the dusk of the evening, the river is seen glittering all over with lights, like the Oton-tala or Sea of Stars), informed the Princess that it was the usual way in which the friends of those who had gone on dangerous voyages offered up vows for their safe return. If the lamp sunk immediately, the omen was disastrous; but if it went shining down the stream, and continued to burn till entirely out of sight, the return of the beloved object was considered as certain.

LALLA ROOKH, as they moved on, more than once looked back, to observe how the young Hindoo's lamp proceeded; and, while she saw with pleasure that it was still unextinguished, she could not help fearing that all the hopes of this life were no better than that feeble light upon the river. The remainder of the journey was passed in silence. She now, for the first time, felt that shade of melancholy, which comes over the youthful maiden's heart, as sweet and transient as her own breath upon a mirror; nor was it till she heard the lute of FERAMORZ, touched lightly at the door of her pavilion, that she waked from the reverie in which she had been wandering. Instantly her eyes were lighted up with pleasure, and, after a few unheard remarks from FADLADEEN upon the indecorum of a poet seating himself in presence of a Princess, every thing was arranged as on the preceding evening, and all listened with eagerness, while the story was thus continued:—

WHOSE are the gilded tents that crowd the way,
Where all was waste and silent yesterday?
This City of War, which, in a few short hours,
Hath sprung up here, as if the magic powers
Of Him who, in the twinkling of a star,
Built the high pillar'd halls of CHILMINAR, *
Had conjured up, far as the eye can see,
This world of tents and domes and sun-bright armory!—
Princely pavilions, screen'd by many a fold
Of crimson cloth, and topp'd with balls of gold ;—
Steeds, with their housings of rich silver spun,
Their chains and poitreles glittering in the sun ;
And camels, tufted o'er with Yemen's shells,
Shaking in every breeze their light-toned bells !

But yester-eve, so motionless around,
So mute was this wide plain, that not a sound

* The edifices of Chilminar and Balbec are supposed to have been built by the Genii, acting under the orders of Jan ben Jan, who governed the world long before the time of Adam.

But the far torrent, or the locust-bird *
Hunting among the thickets, could be heard ;—
Yet hark ! what discords now, of every kind,
Shouts, laughs, and screams, are revelling in the wind !
The neigh of cavalry ;—the tinkling throngs
Of laden camels and their drivers' songs ;—
Ringing of arms, and flapping in the breeze
Of streamers from ten thousand canopies ;—
War-music, bursting out from time to time
With gong and tymbalon's tremendous chime ;—
Or, in the pause, when harsher sounds are mute,
The mellow breathings of some horn or flute,
That far off, broken by the eagle note
Of the Abyssinian trumpet, † swell and float !

Who leads this mighty army ?—ask ye “ who ? ”
And mark ye not those banners of dark hue,
The Night and Shadow, § over yonder tent ?—
It is the CALIPH'S glorious armament.

* A native of Khorassan, and allured southward by means of the water of a fountain, between Shiraz and Ispahan, called the Fountain of Birds, of which it is so fond that it will follow wherever that water is carried.

† “ This trumpet is often called in Abyssinia, nesser cano, which signifies the Note of the Eagle.”—Note of BRUCE'S Editor.

§ The two black standards borne before the Caliphs of the House of Abbas, were called, allegorically, The Night and The Shadow.—See GIBBON.

Roused in his Palace by the dread alarms,
 That hourly came, of the false Prophet's arms,
 And of his host of infidels, who hurled
 Defiance fierce at Islam * and the world ;—
 Though worn with Grecian warfare, and behind
 The veils of his bright Palace calm reclined,
 Yet brook'd he not such blasphemy should stain,
 Thus unrevenged, the evening of his reign,
 But, having sworn upon the Holy Grave †
 To conquer or to perish, once more gave
 His shadowy banners proudly to the breeze,
 And with an army nursed in victories,
 Here stands to crush the rebels that o'er-run
 His blest and beauteous Province of the Sun.

Ne'er did the march of MAHADI display
 Such pomp before ;—not even when on his way
 To MECCA's Temple, when both land and sea
 Were spoil'd to feed the Pilgrim's luxury ; §

* The Mahometan Religion.

† “ The Persians swear by the Tomb of Shah Besade, who is buried at Casbin ; and when one desires another to asseverate a matter, he will ask him, if he dare swear by the Holy Grave.”
 —STRUY.

§ Mahadi, in a single pilgrimage to Mecca, expended six millions of dinars of gold.

When round him, 'mid the burning sands, he saw
 Fruits of the North in icy freshness thaw,
 And cool'd his thirsty lip, beneath the glow
 Of MECCA'S sun, with urns of Persian snow :—*
 Nor e'er did armament more grand than that
 Pour from the kingdoms of the Caliphat.
 First in the van, the People of the Rock, †
 On their light mountain steeds, of royal stock ; §
 Then, Chieftains of DAMASCUS, proud to see
 The flashing of their swords' rich marquetry ; **
 Men from the regions near the VOLGA'S mouth,
 Mix'd with the rude, black archers of the South ;
 And Indian lancers, in white-turban'd ranks
 From the far SINDE, or ATTOCK'S sacred banks,
 With dusky legions from the land of Myrrh, ††
 And many a mace-arm'd Moor and Mid-Sea islander.

* Nivem Meccam apportavit, rem ibi aut numquam aut raro visam.—ABULFEDA.

† The inhabitants of Hejaz or Arabia Petræa, called by an Eastern writer "The People of the Rock."—EBN HAUKAL.

§ "Those horses, called by the Arabians Kochlani, of whom a written genealogy has been kept for two thousand years. They are said to derive their origin from King Solomon's steeds."—NIEBUHR.

 "Many of the figures on the blades of their swords are wrought in gold or silver, or in marquetry with small gems."
 —Asiat. Misc. vol. i.

†† Azab or Saba.

Nor less in number, though more new and rude
 In warfare's school, was the vast multitude
 That, fired by zeal, or by oppression wrong'd,
 Round the white standard of th' Impostor throng'd.
 Beside his thousands of Believers,—blind,
 Burning and headlong as the Samiel wind,—
 Many who felt, and more who fear'd to feel,
 The bloody Islamite's converting steel,
 Flock'd to his banner ;—Chiefs of the UZBEK race,
 Waving their heron crests with martial grace ; *
 TURKOMANS, countless as their flocks, led forth
 From the aromatic pastures of the North ;
 Wild warriors of the turquoise hills,—† and those
 Who dwell beyond the everlasting snows
 Of HINDOO KOSH, § in stormy freedom bred,
 Their fort the rock, their camp the torrent's bed.
 But none, of all who own'd the Chief's command,
 Rush'd to that battle-field with bolder hand,

* “ The chiefs of the Uzbek Tartars wear a plume of white heron's feathers in their turbans.”—Account of Independent Tartary.

† In the mountains of Nishapour and Tous (in Khorassan) they find torquoises.—EBN HAUKAL.

§ For a description of these stupendous ranges of mountains, see ELPHINSTONE'S Caubul.

Or sterner hate, than IRAN'S outlaw'd men,
 Her Worshippers of fire—* all panting then
 For vengeance on the accursed Saracen ;
 Vengeance at last for their dear country spurn'd,
 Her throne usurp'd, and her bright shrines o'erturn'd.
 From YEZD'S † eternal Mansion of the Fire,
 Where aged saints in dreams of Heaven expire ;
 From BADKU, and those fountains of blue flame
 That burn into the CASPIAN, § fierce they came,
 Careless for what or whom the blow was sped,
 So vengeance triumph'd, and their tyrants bled !

* The Ghebers or Guebres, those original natives of Persia, who adhered to their ancient faith, the religion of Zoroaster, and who, after the conquest of their country by the Arabs, were either persecuted at home, or forced to become wanderers abroad.

† “ Yezd, the chief residence of those ancient natives, who worship the Sun and the Fire, which latter they have carefully kept lighted, without being once extinguished for a moment, above three thousand years, on a mountain near Yezd, called Ater Quedah, signifying the House or Mansion of the Fire. He is reckoned very unfortunate who dies off that mountain.”—STEPHEN'S Persia.

§ “ When the weather is hazy, the springs of Naptha (on an island near Baku) boil up the higher, and the Naptha often takes fire on the surface of the earth, and runs in a flame into the sea to a distance almost incredible.”—HANWAY, on the Everlasting Fire at Baku.

Such was the wild and miscellaneous host,
That high in air their motley banners tost
Around the Prophet-Chief—all eyes still bent
Upon that glittering Veil, where'er it went,
That beacon through the battle's stormy flood,
That rainbow of the field, whose showers were blood !

Twice hath the Sun upon their conflict set,
And risen again, and found them grappling yet ;
While steams of carnage, in his noon-tide blaze,
Smoke up to heaven—hot as that crimson haze
By which the prostrate Caravan is awed,
In the Red Desert, when the wind's abroad !
“ On, Swords of God ! ” the panting CALIPH calls,— “ Thrones for the living—Heaven for him who falls ! ”—
“ On, brave avengers, on,” MOKANNA cries,
“ And EBLIS blast the recreant slave that flies ! ”
Now comes the brunt, the crisis of the day—
They clash—they strive—the CALIPH's troops give way !
MOKANNA's self plucks the black Banner down,
And now the Orient World's imperial crown
Is just within his grasp—when, hark, that shout !
Some hand hath check'd the flying Moslems' rout,

And now they turn—they rally—at their head
A warrior (like those angel youths, who led,
In glorious panoply of heaven's own mail,
The Champions of the Faith through BEDER's vale), *
Bold as if gifted with ten thousand lives,
Turns on the fierce pursuers' blades, and drives
At once the multitudinous torrent back,
While hope and courage kindle in his track,
And, at each step, his bloody falchion makes
Terrible vistas through which victory breaks !
In vain MOKANNA, 'midst the general flight,
Stands, like the red moon on some stormy night,
Among the fugitive clouds that, hurrying by,
Leave only her unshaken in the sky !—
In vain he yells his desperate curses out,
Deals death promiscuously to all about,
To foes that charge, and coward friends that fly,
And seems of all the Great Arch-enemy !
The panic spreads—"a miracle !" throughout
The Moslem ranks, "a miracle !" they shout,

* In the great victory gained by Mahomed at Beder, he was assisted, say the Mussulmans, by three thousand angels, led by Gabriel mounted on his horse Hiazum.—See The Koran and its Commentators.

All gazing on that youth, whose coming seems
A light, a glory, such as breaks in dreams ;
And every sword, true as o'er billows dim
The needle tracks the load-star, following him !

Right tow'ards MOKANNA now he cleaves his path,
Impatient cleaves, as though the bolt of wrath
He bears from Heaven withheld its awful burst
From weaker heads, and souls but half-way curst,
To break o'er Him, the mightiest and the worst !
But vain his speed—though in that hour of blood,
Had all God's seraphs round MOKANNA stood,
With swords of fire, ready like fate to fall,
MOKANNA'S soul would have defied them all ;—
Yet now, the rush of fugitives, too strong
For human force, hurries even him along ;
In vain he struggles 'mid the wedged array
Of flying thousands,—he is borne away ;
And the sole joy his baffled spirit knows
In this forced flight is—murdering, as he goes !
As a grim tiger, whom the torrent's might
Surprises in some parch'd ravine at night,
Turns, even in drowning, on the wretched flocks
Swept with him in that snow-flood from the rocks,

And, to the last, devouring on his way,
 Bloodies the stream he hath not power to stay!

“Alla il Alla!”—the glad shout renew—
 “Alla Akbar!”*—the Caliph’s in MEROU.
 Hang out your gilded tapestry in the streets,
 And light your shrines and chaunt your ziraleets; †
 The Swords of God have triumph’d—on his throne
 Your Caliph sits, and the Veil’d Chief hath flown.
 Who does not envy that young warrior now,
 To whom the Lord of Islam bends his brow,
 In all the graceful gratitude of power,
 For his throne’s safety in that perilous hour?
 Who doth not wonder, when, amidst the acclaim
 Of thousands, heralding to heaven his name—
 ’Mid all those holier harmonies of fame,
 Which sound along the path of virtuous souls,
 Like music round a planet as it rolls!—
 He turns away coldly, as if some gloom
 Hung o’er his heart no triumphs can illumine;—

* The Tecbir, or cry of the Arabs. “Alla Akbar!” says OCKLEY, “means God is most mighty.”

† The ziraleet is a kind of chorus which the women of the East sing upon joyful occasions.—RUSSEL.

Some sightless grief, upon whose blasted gaze
Though glory's light may play, in vain it plays !
Yes, wretched AZIM ! thine is such a grief,
Beyond all hope, all terror, all relief ;
A dark, cold calm, which nothing now can break,
Or warm or brighten,—like that Syrian Lake, *
Upon whose surface morn and summer shed
Their smiles in vain, for all beneath is dead !—
Hearts there have been, o'er which this weight of woe
Came by long use of suffering, tame and slow ;
But thine, lost youth ! was sudden—over thee
It broke at once, when all seem'd extacy ;
When Hope look'd up, and saw the gloomy past
Melt into splendour, and bliss dawn at last—
'Twas then, even then, o'er joys so freshly blown,
This mortal blight of misery came down ;
Even then, the full, warm gushings of thy heart
Were check'd—like fount-drops, frozen as they start !
And there, like them, cold, sunless relics hang,
Each fix'd and chill'd into a lasting pang !

One sole desire, one passion now remains,
To keep life's fever still within his veins,

* The Dead Sea, which contains neither animal nor vegetable life.

Vengeance!—dire vengeance on the wretch who cast
O'er him and all he loved that ruinous blast.
For this, when rumours reach'd him in his flight
Far, far away, after that fatal night,—
Rumours of armies, thronging to the attack
Of the Veil'd Chief,—for this he wing'd him back,
Fleet as the vulture speeds to flags unfurl'd,
And came when all seem'd lost, and wildly hurl'd
Himself into the scale, and saved a world!
For this he still lives on, careless of all
The wreaths that glory on his path lets fall;
For this alone exists—like lightning-fire,
To speed one bolt of vengeance, and expire!

But safe as yet that Spirit of Evil lives;
With a small band of desperate fugitives,
The last sole stubborn fragment, left unriven,
Of the proud host that late stood fronting heaven,
He gain'd MEROU—breathed a short curse of blood
O'er his lost throne—then pass'd the JIHON's flood,*
And gathering all, whose madness of belief
Still saw a Saviour in their down-fallen Chief,

* The ancient Oxus.

Raised the white banner within NEKSHEB's gates,*
And there, untamed, th' approaching conqueror waits.

Of all his Haram, all that busy hive,
With music and with sweets sparkling alive,
He took but one, the partner of his flight,
One, not for love—not for her beauty's light—
For ZELICA stood withering 'midst the gay,
Wan as the blossom that fell yesterday
From the Alma tree and dies, while overhead
To-day's young flower is springing in its stead! †
No, not for love—the deepest damn'd must be Touch'd with heaven's glory, ere such fiends as he
Can feel one glimpse of love's divinity!
But no, she is his victim;—there lie all
Her charms for him—charms that can never pall,
As long as hell within his heart can stir,
Or one faint trace of heaven is left in her.
To work an angel's ruin,—to behold
As white a page as Virtue e'er unroll'd

* A city of Transoxiana.

† “You never can cast your eyes on this tree, but you meet there either blossoms or fruit; and as the blossom drops underneath on the ground (which is frequently covered with these purple-coloured flowers), others come forth in their stead,” etc. etc.—NIEUHOFF.

Blacken, beneath his touch, into a scroll
Of damning sins, seal'd with a burning soul—
This is his triumph ; this the joy accurst,
That ranks him among demons all but first !
This gives the victim, that before him lies
Blighted and lost, a glory in his eyes,
A light like that with which hell-fire illumines
The ghastly, writhing wretch whom it consumes !

But other tasks now wait him—tasks that need
All the deep daringness of thought and deed
With which the Dives * have gifted him—for mark,
Over yon plains, which night had else made dark,
Those lanterns, countless as the winged lights
That spangle INDIA'S fields on showery nights, †
Far as their formidable gleams they shed,
The mighty tents of the beleaguerer spread,
Glimmering along the horizon's dusky line,
And thence in nearer circles, till they shine
Among the founts and groves, o'er which the town
In all its arm'd magnificence looks down.

* The Demons of the Persian mythology.

† CARRERI mentions the fire-flies in India during the rainy season.—See his Travels.

Yet, fearless, from his lofty battlements
MOKANNA views that multitude of tents ;
Nay, smiles to think that, though entoil'd, beset,
Not less than myriads dare to front him yet ;—
That friendless, throneless, he thus stands at bay,
Even thus a match for myriads such as they !
“ Oh ! for a sweep of that dark Angel's wing,
“ Who brush'd the thousands of th' Assyrian King *
“ To darkness in a moment, that I might “ People Hell's chambers with yon host to-night !
“ But come what may, let who will grasp the throne,
“ Caliph or Prophet, Man alike shall groan ;
“ Let who will torture him, Priest—Caliph—King—
“ Alike this loathsome world of his shall ring
“ With victims' shrieks and howlings of the slave,—
“ Sounds that shall glad me even within my grave ! ”
Thus to himself—but to the scanty train
Still left around him, a far different strain :—
“ Glorious defenders of the sacred crown
“ I bear from Heaven, whose light nor blood shall drown
“ Nor shadow of earth eclipse ;—before whose gems
“ The paly pomp of this world's diadems,

* Sennacherib, called by the orientals King of Moussal.—D'HER-BELOT.

“ The crown of GERASHID, the pillar’d throne
 “ Of PARVIZ,* and the heron crest that shone †
 “ Magnificent, o’er ALI’s beauteous eyes, §
 “ Fade like the stars when morn is in the skies :
 “ Warriors, rejoice—the port, to which we’ve pass’d
 “ O’er destiny’s dark wave, beams out at last !
 “ Victory’s our own—’tis written in that Book
 “ Upon whose leaves none but the angels look,
 “ That ISLAM’s sceptre shall beneath the power
 “ Of her great foe fall broken in that hour,
 “ When the moon’s mighty orb, before all eyes,
 “ From NEKSHEB’s Holy Well portentously shall rise !
 “ Now turn and see !”——

They turn’d, and, as he spoke,
 A sudden splendour all around them broke,
 And they beheld an orb, ample and bright,
 Rise from the Holy Well, and cast its light

* Chosroes. For the description of his Throne or Palace, see GIBBON and D’HERBELOT.

† “ The crown of Gerashid is cloudy and tarnished before the heron tuft of thy turban.”—From one of the elegies or songs in praise of Ali, written in characters of gold round the gallery of Abbas’s tomb.—See CHARDIN.

§ The beauty of Ali’s eyes was so remarkable, that whenever the Persians would describe any thing as very lovely, they say it is Ayn Hali, or the Eyes of Ali.—CHARDIN.

Round the rich city and the plain for miles,—^{*}
 Flinging such radiance o'er the gilded tiles
 Of many a dome and fair-roof'd imaret,
 As autumn suns shed round them when they set !
 Instant from all who saw the illusive sign
 A murmur broke—"Miraculous ! divine !"

The Gheber bow'd, thinking his idol Star
 Had waked, and burst impatient through the bar
 Of midnight, to inflame him to the war !

While he of MOUSSA's creed saw, in that ray,
 The glorious Light which, in his freedom's day,
 Had rested on the Ark,† and now again
 Shone out to bless the breaking of his chain !

"To victory !" is at once the cry of all—
 Nor stands MOKANNA loitering at that call ;
 But instant the huge gates are flung aside,
 And forth, like a diminutive mountain-tide

^{*} "Il amusa pendant deux mois le peuple de la ville de Nekhscheb, en faisant sortir toutes les nuits du fond d'un puits un corps lumineux semblable à la Lune, qui portait sa lumière jusqu'à la distance de plusieurs milles."—D'HERBELOT. Hence he was called Sazendéh mah, or the Moon-maker.

[†] The Shechinah, called Sakînat in the Koran.—See SALE's Note, chap. ii.

Into the boundless sea, they speed their course
Right on into the MOSLEM's mighty force.
The watchmen of the camp,—who, in their rounds,
Had paused and even forgot the punctual sounds
Of the small drum with which they count the night, *
To gaze upon that supernatural light,—
Now sink beneath an unexpected arm,
And in a death-groan give their last alarm.
“ On for the lamps, that light yon lofty screen, †
“ Nor blunt your blades with massacre so mean ;
“ There rests the CALIPH—speed—one lucky lance
“ May now achieve mankind's deliverance ! ”
Desperate the die—such as they only cast
Who venture for a world, and stake their last.
But Fate's no longer with him—blade for blade
Springs up to meet them through the glimmering shade,
And, as the clash is heard, new legions soon
Pour to the spot,—like bees of KAUZEROON §

* The parts of the night are made known as well by instruments of music, as by the rounds of the watchmen with cries and small drums.—See BURDER'S Oriental Customs, vol. i. p. 119.

† The Serrapurda, high screens of red cloth, stiffened with cane, used to inclose a considerable space round the royal tents.—Notes on the Bahardanush.

§ “ From the groves of orange trees at Kauzeroon, the bees cull a celebrated honey.”—MORIER'S Travels.

To the shrill timbrel's summons,—till, at length,
 The mighty camp swarms out in all its strength,
 And back to NEKSHEB's gates, covering the plain
 With random slaughter, drives the adventurous train ;
 Among the last of whom, the Silver Veil
 Is seen glittering at times, like the white sail
 Of some toss'd vessel, on a stormy night,
 Catching the tempest's momentary light !

And hath not this brought the proud spirit low ?
 Nor dash'd his brow, nor check'd his daring ? No.
 Though half the wretches, whom at night he led
 To thrones and victory, lie disgraced and dead,
 Yet morning hears him, with unshrinking crest,
 Still vaunt of thrones, and victory to the rest ;—
 And they believe him !—oh, the lover may
 Distrust that look which steals his soul away ;—
 The babe may cease to think that it can play
 With heaven's rainbow ;—alchymists may doubt
 The shining gold their crucible gives out—
 But Faith, fanatic Faith, once wedded fast
 To some dear falsehood, hugs it to the last.

And well th' Impostor knew all lures and arts,
 That LUCIFER e'er taught to tangle hearts ;

Nor, 'mid these last bold workings of his plot
Against men's souls, is ZELICA forgot.
Ill-fated ZELICA ! had reason been
Awake, through half the horrors thou hast seen,
Thou never couldst have borne it—Death had come
At once and taken thy wrung spirit home.
But 'twas not so—a torpor, a suspense
Of thought, almost of life, came o'er th' intense
And passionate struggles of that fearful night,
When her last hope of peace and heaven took flight :
And though, at times, a gleam of frenzy broke,—
As through some dull volcano's veil of smoke
Ominous flashings now and then will start,
Which show the fire's still busy at its heart ;
Yet was she mostly wrapp'd in sullen gloom,—
Not such as AZIM's, brooding o'er its doom,
And calm without, as is the brow of death,
While busy worms are gnawing underneath !—
But in a blank and pulseless torpor, free
From thought or pain, a seal'd up apathy,
Which left her oft, with scarce one living thrill,
The cold, pale victim of her torturer's will.

Again, as in MEROU, he had her deck'd
Gorgeously out, the Priestess of the sect ;

And led her glittering forth before the eyes
Of his rude train, as to a sacrifice ;
Pallid as she, the young, devoted bride
Of the fierce NILE, when, deck'd in all the pride
Of nuptial pomp, she sinks into his tide ! *
And while the wretched maid hung down her head,
And stood, as one just risen from the dead,
Amid that gazing crowd, the fiend would tell
His credulous slaves it was some charm or spell
Possess'd her now,—and from that darken'd trance
Should dawn ere long their Faith's deliverance.
Or if, at times, goaded by guilty shame,
Her soul was roused, and words of wildness came,
Instant the bold blasphemer would translate
Her ravings into oracles of fate,
Would hail Heaven's signals in her flashing eyes,
And call her shrieks the language of the skies !

But vain at length his arts—despair is seen
Gathering around ; and famine comes to glean

* “ A custom still subsisting at this day, seems to me to prove that the Egyptians formerly sacrificed a young virgin to the God of the Nile ; for they now make a statue of earth in shape of a girl, to which they give the name of the Betrothed Bride, and throw it into the river.”—SAVARY.

All that the sword had left unreap'd :—in vain
At morn and eve across the northern plain
He looks impatient for the promised spears
Of the wild Hordes and TARTAR mountaineers ;
They come not—while his fierce beleaguers pour
Engines of havoc in, unknown before,
And horrible as new ; *—javelins, that fly
Enwreathed with smoky flames through the dark sky,
And red-hot globes that, opening as they mount,
Discharge, as from a kindled Naptha fount,
Showers of consuming fire o'er all below ;
Looking, as through th' illumined night they go,
Like those wild birds † that, by the Magians oft,
At festivals of fire, were sent aloft
Into the air, with blazing faggots tied
To their huge wings, scattering combustion wide !

* The Greek fire, which was occasionally lent by the Emperors to their allies. “It was,” says GIBBON, “either launched in red-hot balls of stone and iron, or darted in arrows and javelins, twisted round with flax and tow, which had deeply imbibed the inflammable oil.”

† “At the great festival of fire, called the Sheb-Sezé, they used to set fire to large bunches of dry combustibles, fastened round wild beasts and birds, which being then let loose, the air and earth appeared one great illumination ; and as these terrified creatures naturally fled to the wood for shelter, it is easy to conceive the conflagrations they produced.”—RICHARDSON'S Dissertation.

All night, the groans of wretches who expire,
 In agony, beneath these darts of fire,
 Ring through the city—while, descending o'er
 Its shrines and domes and streets of sycamore ;—
 Its lone bazaars, with their bright cloths of gold,
 Since the last peaceful pageant left unroll'd ;—
 Its beauteous marble baths, whose idle jets
 Now gush with blood ;—and its tall minarets,
 That late have stood up in the evening glare
 Of the red sun, unhallow'd by a prayer ;—
 O'er each, in turn, the dreadful flame-bolts fall,
 And death and conflagration throughout all
 The desolate city hold high festival !

MOKANNA sees the world is his no more ;—
 One sting at parting, and his grasp is o'er.
 “ What ! drooping now ? ”—thus, with unblushing cheek,
 He hails the few, who yet can hear him speak,
 Of all those famish'd slaves, around him lying,
 And by the light of blazing temples dying ;—
 “ What ! drooping now ?—now, when at length we press
 “ Home o'er the very threshold of success ;

“ When ALLA from our ranks hath thinn’d away
“ Those grosser branches, that kept out his ray
“ Of favour from us, and we stand at length
“ Heirs of his light and children of his strength,
“ The chosen few, who shall survive the fall
“ Of Kings and Thrones, triumphant over all!
“ Have you then lost, weak murmurers as you are,
“ All faith in him, who was your Light, your Star?
“ Have you forgot the eye of glory, hid
“ Beneath this Veil, the flashing of whose lid
“ Could, like a sun-stroke of the desert, wither
“ Millions of such as yonder Chief brings hither?
“ Long have its lightnings slept—too long—but now
“ All earth shall feel th’ unveiling of this brow!
“ To-night!—yes, sainted men! this very night,
“ I bid you all to a fair festal rite,
“ Where,—having deep refresh’d each weary limb
“ With viands such as feast Heaven’s cherubim,
“ And kindled up your souls, now sunk and dim,
“ With that pure wine the dark-eyed maids above “ Keep, seal’d with precious musk, for those they love,—*

* “ The righteous shall be given to drink of pure wine, sealed;
the seal whereof shall be musk.”—Koran, chap. lxxxiii.

“ I will myself uncurtain in your sight
“ The wonders of this brow’s ineffable light ;
“ Then lead you forth, and with a wink disperse
“ Yon myriads, howling through the universe !”

Eager they listen—while each accent darts
New life into their chill’d and hope-sick hearts ;—
Such treacherous life as the cool draught supplies
To him upon the stake, who drinks and dies !
Wildly they point their lances to the light
Of the fast sinking sun, and shout “ to-night !”—
“ To-night,” their Chief re-echoes, in a voice
Of fiend-like mockery that bids hell rejoice !
Deluded victims—never hath this earth
Seen mourning half so mournful as their mirth !
Here, to the few, whose iron frames had stood
This racking waste of famine and of blood,
Faint, dying wretches clung, from whom the shout
Of triumph like a maniac’s laugh broke out ;—
There, others, lighted by the smouldering fire,
Danced, like wan ghosts about a funeral pyre,
Among the dead and dying, strew’d around ;—
While some pale wretch look’d on, and from his wound

Plucking the fiery dart by which he bled,
In ghastly transport waved it o'er his head!

'Twas more than midnight now—a fearful pause
Had follow'd the long shouts, the wild applause,
That lately from those royal gardens burst,
Where the Veil'd demon held his feast accurst,
When ZELICA—alas, poor ruin'd heart,
In every horror doom'd to bear its part!—
Was bidden to the banquet by a slave,
Who, while his quivering lip the summons gave,
Grew black, as though the shadows of the grave
Compass'd him round, and, ere he could repeat
His message through, fell lifeless at her feet!
Shuddering she went—a soul-felt pang of fear,
A presage that her own dark doom was near,
Roused every feeling, and brought reason back
Once more, to writhe her last upon the rack.
All round seem'd tranquil—even the foe had ceased,
As if aware of that demoniac feast,
His fiery bolts; and though the heavens look'd red,
'Twas but some distant conflagration's spread.
But hark!—she stops—she listens—dreadful tone!
'Tis her Tormentor's laugh—and now, a groan,

A long death-groan comes with it—can this be
The place of mirth, the bower of revelry?
She enters—Holy ALLA, what a sight
Was there before her! By the glimmering light
Of the pale dawn, mix'd with the flare of brands
That round lay burning, dropp'd from lifeless hands,
She saw the board, in splendid mockery spread,
Rich censers breathing—garlands overhead,—
The urns, the cups, from which they late had quaff'd,
All gold and gems, but—what had been the draught?
Oh! who need ask, that saw those livid guests,
With their swell'n heads sunk blackening on their breasts,
Or looking pale to Heaven with glassy glare,
As if they sought but saw no mercy there;
As if they felt, though poison rack'd them through,
Remorse the deadlier torment of the two!
While some, the bravest, hardest in the train
Of their false Chief, who on the battle-plain
Would have met death with transport by his side,
Here mute and helpless gasp'd;—but as they died,
Look'd horrible vengeance with their eyes' last strain,
And clench'd the slackening hand at him in vain.

Dreadful it was to see the ghastly stare,
The stony look of horror and despair,
Which some of these expiring victims cast
Upon their souls' tormentor to the last;—
Upon that mocking Fiend, whose Veil, now raised,
Show'd them, as in death's agony they gazed,
Not the long promised light, the brow, whose beaming
Was to come forth, all conquering, all redeeming,
But features horribler than Hell e'er traced
On its own brood;—no Demon of the Waste,*
No church-yard Ghoul, caught lingering in the light
Of the bless'd sun, e'er blasted human sight
With lineaments so foul, so fierce as those
Th' Impostor now, in grinning mockery, shows—
“There, ye wise Saints, behold your Light, your Star,— “Ye would be dupes and victims, and ye are.
“Is it enough? or must I, while a thrill
“Lives in your sapient bosoms, cheat you still?
“Swear that the burning death ye feel within,
“Is but the trance, with which Heaven's joys begin;

* “The Afghauns believe each of the numerous solitudes and deserts of their country to be inhabited by a lonely demon, whom they call the Ghoolie Beeabau, or Spirit of the Waste. They often illustrate the wildness of any sequestered tribe, by saying, they are wild as the Demon of the Waste.”—ELPHINSTONE'S Caubul.

“ That this foul visage, foul as e’er disgraced
“ Even monstrous man, is—after God’s own taste ;
“ And that—but see!—ere I have half-way said
“ My greetings through, th’ uncourteous souls are fled.
“ Farewell, sweet spirits! not in vain ye die,
“ If EBLIS loves you half so well as I.—
“ Ha, my young bride!—’tis well—take thou thy seat ;
“ Nay, come—no shuddering—did’st thou never meet }
“ The dead before?—They graced our wedding, sweet ; }
“ And these, my guests to-night, have brimm’d so true
“ Their parting cups, that thou shalt pledge one too.
“ But—how is this?—all empty? all drunk up?
“ Hot lips have been before thee in the cup,
“ Young bride,—yet stay—one precious drop remains,
“ Enough to warm a gentle Priestess’ veins ;——
“ Here, drink—and should thy lover’s conquering arms
“ Speed hither, ere thy lip lose all its charms,
“ Give him but half this venom in thy kiss,
“ And I’ll forgive my haughty rival’s bliss !

“ For me—I too must die—but not like these “ Vile, rankling things, to fester in the breeze ;
“ To have this brow in ruffian triumph shown,
“ With all death’s grimness added to its own,

- “ And rot to dust beneath the taunting eyes
“ Of slaves, exclaiming ‘ There his Godship lies ! ’—
“ No—cursed race—since first my soul drew breath, “ They’ve been my dupes, and shall be, even in death.
“ Thou see’st yon cistern in the shade—’tis fill’d
“ With burning drugs, for this last hour distill’d ;—
“ There will I plunge me, in that liquid flame—
“ Fit bath to lave a dying Prophet’s frame !—
“ There perish, all—ere pulse of thine shall fail—
“ Nor leave one limb to tell mankind the tale.
“ So shall my votaries, wheresoe’er they rave,
“ Proclaim that Heaven took back the Saint it gave ;—
“ That I’ve but vanish’d from this earth awhile,
“ To come again, with bright, unshrouded smile !
“ So shall they build me altars in their zeal,
“ Where knaves shall minister and fools shall kneel ;
“ Where Faith may mutter o’er her mystic spell,
“ Written in blood—and Bigotry may swell
“ The sail he spreads for Heaven with blasts from Hell !
“ So shall my banner, through long ages, be
“ The rallying sign of fraud and anarchy ;—
“ Kings yet unborn shall rue MOKANNA’S name,
“ And, though I die, my Spirit, still the same,

“ Shall walk abroad in all the stormy strife,
“ And guilt, and blood, that were its bliss in life !
“ But, hark ! their battering engine shakes the wall—
“ Why, let it shake—thus I can brave them all.
“ No trace of me shall greet them, when they come,
“ And I can trust thy faith, for—thou’lt be dumb.
“ Now mark how readily a wretch like me,
“ In one bold plunge commences Deity !”

He sprung and sunk, as the last words were said—
Quick closed the burning waters o’er his head,
And ZELICA was left—within the ring
Of those wide walls the only living thing ;
The only wretched one, still cursed with breath,
In all that frightful wilderness of death !
More like some bloodless ghost,—such as, they tell,
In the lone Cities of the Silent* dwell,
And there, unseen of all but ALLA, sit
Each by its own pale carcase, watching it.

* “ They have all a great reverence for burial-grounds, which they sometimes call by the poetical name of Cities of the Silent, and which they people with the ghosts of the departed, who sit each at the head of his own grave, invisible to mortal eyes.”
—ELPHINSTONE.

But morn is up, and a fresh warfare stirs
Throughout the camp of the beleaguers.
Their globes of fire (the dread artillery, lent
By GREECE to conquering MAHADI), are spent ;
And now the scorpion's shaft, the quarry sent
From high balistas, and the shielded throng
Of soldiers swinging the huge ram along,—
All speak th' impatient Ismalite's intent
To try, at length, if tower and battlement
And bastion'd wall be not less hard to win,
Less tough to break down than the hearts within.
First in impatience and in toil is he,
The burning AZIM—oh ! could he but see
Th' Impostor once alive within his grasp,
Not the gaunt lion's hug, nor boa's clasp,
Could match that gripe of Vengeance, or keep pace
With the fell heartiness of Hate's embrace !

Loud rings the ponderous ram against the walls ;
Now shake the ramparts, now a buttress falls,
But still no breach—"once more, one mighty swing
"Of all your beams, together thundering !"
There—the wall shakes—the shouting troops exult—
"Quick, quick discharge your weightiest catapult

“ Right on that spot, and NEKSHEB is our own ! ”—
’Tis done—the battlements come crashing down,
And the huge wall, by that stroke riven in two,
Yawning, like some old crater, rent anew,
Shows the dim, desolate city smoking through !
But strange ! no signs of life—nought living seen
Above, below—what can this stillness mean ?
A minute’s pause suspends all hearts and eyes—
“ In through the breach,” impetuous AZIM cries ;
But the cool CALIPH, fearful of some wile
In this blank stillness, checks the troops awhile.—
Just then, a figure, with slow step, advanced
Forth from the ruin’d walls ; and, as there glanced
A sunbeam over it, all eyes could see
The well-known Silver Veil !—“ ’Tis He, ’tis He, “ MOKANNA, and alone ! ” they shout around ;
Young AZIM from his steed springs to the ground—
“ Mine, Holy Caliph ! mine,” he cries, “ the task
“ To crush yon daring wretch—’tis all I ask.”
Eager he darts to meet the demon foe,
Who still across wide heaps of ruin slow
And falteringly comes, till they are near ;
Then, with a bound, rushes on AZIM’s spear,

And, casting off the Veil in falling, shows—
Oh!—'tis his ZELICA's life-blood that flows!

“ I meant not, AZIM,” soothingly she said,
As on his trembling arm she lean'd her head,
And, looking in his face, saw anguish there
Beyond all wounds the quivering flesh can bear—
“ I meant not thou shouldst have the pain of this ;— “ Though death, with thee thus tasted, is a bliss
“ Thou wouldst not rob me of, didst thou but know
“ How oft I've pray'd to God I might die so!
“ But the Fiend's venom was too scant and slow ;—
“ To linger on were maddening—and I thought
“ If once that Veil—nay, look not on it—caught
“ The eyes of your fierce soldiery, I should be “ Struck by a thousand death-darts instantly.
“ But this is sweeter—oh! believe me, yes—
“ I would not change this sad, but dear caress,
“ This death within thy arms I would not give
“ For the most smiling life the happiest live!
“ All, that stood dark and drear before the eye
“ Of my stray'd soul, is passing swiftly by;
“ A light comes o'er me from those looks of love,
“ Like the first dawn of mercy from above ;

“ And if thy lips but tell me I’m forgiven,
“ Angels will echo the blest words in Heaven!
“ But live, my AZIM;—oh! to call thee mine
“ Thus once again! my AZIM—dream divine!
“ Live, if thou ever lov’dst me, if to meet
“ Thy ZELICA hereafter would be sweet,
“ Oh live to pray for her—to bend the knee
“ Morning and night before that Deity,
“ To whom pure lips and hearts without a stain,
“ As thine are, AZIM, never breathed in vain,—
“ And pray that He may pardon her,—may take “ Compassion on her soul for thy dear sake,
“ And, nought remembering but her love to thee,
“ Make her all thine, all His, eternally!
“ Go to those happy fields where first we twined
“ Our youthful hearts together—every wind
“ That meets thee there, fresh from the well-known flowers,
“ Will bring the sweetness of those innocent hours
“ Back to thy soul, and thou mayst feel again
“ For thy poor ZELICA as thou didst then.
“ So shall thy orisons, like dew that flies
“ To Heaven upon the morning’s sunshine, rise
“ With all love’s earliest ardour to the skies!

}

“ And should they—but alas! my senses fail—
“ Oh, for one minute!—should thy prayers prevail—
“ If pardon’d souls may from that World of Bliss “ Reveal their joy to those they love in this,— “ I’ll come to thee—in some sweet dream—and tell—
“ Oh Heaven—I die—dear love! farewell, farewell.”

Time fled—years on years had pass’d away,
And few of those who on that mournful day
Had stood, with pity in their eyes, to see
The maiden’s death and the youth’s agony,
Were living still—when, by a rustic grave
Beside the swift Amoo’s transparent wave,
An aged man, who had grown aged there
By that lone grave, morning and night in prayer,
For the last time knelt down—and, though the shade
Of death hung darkening over him, there play’d
A gleam of rapture on his eye and cheek,
That brighten’d even Death—like the last streak
Of intense glory on the horizon’s brim,
When night o’er all the rest hangs chill and dim,—
His soul had seen a vision, while he slept;
She, for whose spirit he had pray’d and wept

So many years, had come to him, all dress'd
In angel smiles, and told him she was bless'd !
For this the old man breathed his thanks, and died.—
And there, upon the banks of that loved tide,
He and his ZELICA sleep side by side.

THE story of the Veiled Prophet of Khorassan being ended, they were now doomed to hear FAD-LADEEN'S criticisms upon it. A series of disappointments and accidents had occurred to this learned Chamberlain during the journey. In the first place, those couriers stationed, as in the reign of Shah Jehan, between Delhi and the Western coast of India, to secure a constant supply of mangoes for the Royal Table, had, by some cruel irregularity, failed in their duty; and to eat any mangoes but those of Mazagong was, of course, impossible. In the next place, the elephant, laden with his fine antique porcelain, had in an unusual fit of liveliness shattered the whole set to pieces:—an irreparable loss, as many of the vessels were so exquisitely old as to have been used under the Emperors Yan and Chun, who reigned many ages before the dynasty of Tang. His Koran too, supposed to be the identical copy between the leaves of which Mahomet's favourite pigeon used to nestle, had been mislaid by his Koran-bearer three whole days ; not without much spiritual alarm to FADLADEEN, who, though professing to hold, with other loyal and orthodox Mussulmans, that salvation could only be found in the Koran, was strongly suspected of believing in his heart, that it could only be found in his own particular copy of it. When to all these grievances is added the obstinacy of the cooks, in putting the pepper of Canara into his dishes instead of the cinnamon of Serendib, we may easily suppose that he came to the task of criticism with, at least, a sufficient degree of irritability for the purpose.

“ In order,” said he, importantly swinging about his chaplet of pearls, “ to convey with clearness my opinion of the story this young man has related, it is necessary to take a review of all the stories that have ever——” “ My good FADLADEEN !” exclaimed the Princess, interrupting him, “ we really do not deserve that you should give yourself so much trouble. Your opinion of the poem we have just heard, will, I have no doubt, be abundantly edifying, without any further waste of your valuable erudition." "If that be all," replied the critic,—evidently mortified at not being allowed to show how much he knew about every thing, but the subject immediately before him;—"if that be all that is required, the matter is easily dispatched." He then proceeded to analyse the poem, in that strain (so well known to the unfortunate bards of Delhi), whose censures were an infliction from which few recovered, and whose very praises were like the honey extracted from the bitter flowers of the aloe. The chief personages of the story were, if he rightly understood them, an ill-favoured gentleman, with a veil over his face;—a young lady, whose reason went and came according as it suited the poet's convenience to be sensible or otherwise;—and a youth in one of those hideous Bucharian bonnets, who took the aforesaid gentleman in a veil for a Divinity. "From such materials," said he, "what can be expected?—after rivalling each other in long speeches and absurdities, through some thousands of lines as indigestible as the filberds of Berdaa, our friend in the veil jumps into a tub of aquafortis ; the young lady dies in a set speech, whose only recommendation is that it is her last ; and the lover lives on to a good old age, for the laudable purpose of seeing her ghost, which he at last happily accomplishes and expires. This, you will allow, is a fair summary of the story ; and if Nasser, the Arabian merchant, told no better, our Holy Prophet (to whom be all honour and glory!) had no need to be jealous of his abilities for story-telling.”*

With respect to the style, it was worthy of the matter ;—it had not even those politic contrivances of structure, which make up for the commonness of the thoughts by the peculiarity of the manner, nor that stately poetical phraseology by which sentiments, mean in themselves, like the blacksmith’s† apron converted into a banner, are so easily gilt and embroidered into consequence. Then, as to the versification, it was, to say no worse of it, execrable: it had neither the copious flow of Ferdosi, the sweetness of Hafez, nor the sententious march of Sadi; but appeared to him, in the uneasy heaviness of its movements, to have been modelled upon the gait of a very tired dromedary. The licenses too in which it indulged were unpardonable;—for instance this line, and the poem abounded with such—

* La lecture de ces Fables plaisait si fort aux Arabes, que, quand Mahomet les entretenait de l’Histoire de l’Ancien Testament, ils les méprisaient, lui disant que celles que Nasser leur racontait étaient beaucoup plus belles. Cette préférence attira à Nasser la malédiction de Mahomet et de tous ses disciples.—D’HERBELOT.

† The blacksmith Gao, who successfully resisted the tyrant Zohak, and whose apron became the Royal Standard of Persia.

Like the faint, exquisite music of a dream.

“What critic that can count,” said FADLADEEN, “and has his full complement of fingers to count withal, would tolerate for an instant such syllabic superfluities?”—He here looked round and discovered that most of his audience were asleep; while the glimmering lamps seemed inclined to follow their example. It became necessary, therefore, however painful to himself, to put an end to his valuable animadversions for the present, and he accordingly concluded, with an air of dignified candour, thus :—“ Notwithstanding the observations which I have thought it my duty to make, it is by no means my wish to discourage the young man :—so far from it, indeed, that if he will but totally alter his style of writing and thinking, I have very little doubt that I shall be vastly pleased with him.”

Some days elapsed, after this harangue of the Great Chamberlain, before LALLA ROOKH could venture to ask for another story. The youth was still a welcome guest in the pavilion ;—to one heart, perhaps, too dangerously welcome—but all mention of poetry was, as if by common consent, avoided. Though none of the party had much respect for FADLADEEN, yet his censures, thus magisterially delivered, evidently made an impression on them all. The Poet himself, to whom criticism was quite a new operation (being wholly unknown in that Paradise of the Indies, Cashmere), felt the shock as it is generally felt at first, till use has made it more tolerable to the patient;—the ladies began to suspect that they ought not to be pleased, and seemed to conclude that there must have been much good sense in what FADLA-DEEN said, from its having set them all so soundly to sleep ;—while the self-complacent Chamberlain was left to triumph in the idea of having, for the hundred and fiftieth time in his life, extinguished a Poet. LALLA ROOKH alone—and Love knew why—persisted in being delighted with all she had heard, and in resolving to hear more as speedily as possible. Her manner, however, of first returning to the subject was unlucky. It was while they rested during the heat of noon near a fountain, on which some hand had rudely traced those well-known words from the Garden of Sadi, —“ Many, like me, have viewed this fountain, but they are gone, and their eyes are closed for ever !”—that she took occasion, from the melancholy beauty of this passage, to dwell upon the charms of poetry in general. “ It is true,” she said, “ few poets can imitate that sublime bird, which flies always in the air, and never touches the earth : *—it is only once in many ages a genius appears, whose words, like those on the Written Mountain, last for ever :—but still there are some, as delightful perhaps, though not so wonderful, who, if not stars over our head, are at least flowers along our path, and whose sweetness of the moment we ought gratefully to inhale, without calling upon them for a brightness and a durability beyond their nature. In short,” continued she, blushing, as if conscious of being caught in an oration, “it is quite cruel that a poet cannot wander through his regions of enchantment, without having a critic for ever, like the old Man of the Sea, upon his back !” *—FADLADEEN, it was plain, took this last luckless allusion to himself, and would treasure it up in his mind as a whetstone for his next criticism. A sudden silence ensued ; and the Princess, glancing a look at FERAMORZ, saw plainly she must wait for a more courageous moment.

* The Huma.

But the glories of Nature, and her wild, fragrant airs, playing freshly over the current of youthful spirits, will soon heal even deeper wounds than the dull Fadladeens of this world can inflict. In an evening or two after, they came to the small Valley of Gardens, which had been planted by order of the Emperor for his favourite sister Ro-chinara, during their progress to Cashmere, some years before; and never was there a more sparkling assemblage of sweets, since the Gulzar-e-Irem, or Rose-Bower of Irem. Every precious flower was there to be found, that poetry, or love, or religion has ever consecrated; from the dark hyacinth, to which Hafez compares his mistress's hair, to the Cámalatá, by whose rosy blossoms the heaven of Indra is scented. As they sat in the cool fragrance of this delicious spot, and LALLA ROOKH remarked that she could fancy it the abode of that Flower-loving Nymph whom they worship in the temples of Kathay, or of one of those Peris, those beautiful creatures of the air, who live upon perfumes, and to whom a place like this might make some amends for the Paradise they have lost,—the young Poet, in whose eyes she appeared, while she spoke, to be one of the bright spiritual creatures she was describing, said hesitatingly that he remembered a Story of a Peri, which, if the Princess had no objection, he would venture to relate. "It is," said he, with an appealing look to FADLA-DEEN, "in a lighter and humbler strain than the other;" then, striking a few careless but melancholy chords on his kitar, he thus began :—

* The story of Sinbad.

PARADISE AND THE PERI.

ONE morn a Peri at the Gate
Of Eden stood disconsolate ;
And as she listen'd to the Springs
Of Life within, like music flowing,
And caught the light upon her wings
Through the half-open portal glowing,
She wept to think her recreant race
Should e'er have lost that glorious place !

“ How happy,” exclaim'd this child of air,
“ Are the holy Spirits who wander there,
“ 'Mid flowers that never shall fade or fall ;
“ Though mine are the gardens of earth and sea,
“ And the stars themselves have flowers for me,
“ One blossom of Heaven out-blooms them all !

“ Though sunny the Lake of cool CASHMERE,
 “ With its plane-tree Isle reflected clear, *
 “ And sweetly the founts of that Valley fall ;
 “ Though bright are the waters of SING-SU-HAY,
 “ And the golden floods, that thitherward stray, †
 “ Yet—oh, ’tis only the Blest can say
 “ How the waters of Heaven outshine them all !

“ Go, wing thy flight from star to star,
 “ From world to luminous world, as far
 “ As the universe spreads its flaming wall ;
 “ Take all the pleasures of all the spheres,
 “ And multiply each through endless years,
 “ One minute of Heaven is worth them all !”

The glorious Angel, who was keeping
 The gates of Light, beheld her weeping ;
 And, as he nearer drew and listen’d
 To her sad song, a tear-drop glisten’d

* “ Numerous small islands emerge from the Lake of Cashmere. One is called Char Chenaur, from the plane-trees upon it.”—FORSTER.

† “ The Altan Kol, or Golden River of Tibet, which runs into the Lakes of Sing-su-hay, has abundance of gold in its sands, which employs the inhabitants all summer in gathering it.”—Description of Tibet in PINKERTON.

Within his eyelids, like the spray
From Eden's fountain, when it lies
On the blue flower, which—Bramins say—
Blooms no where but in Paradise !
“ Nymph of a fair, but erring line !”
Gently he said—“ One hope is thine.
“ 'Tis written in the Book of Fate,
“ The Peri yet may be forgiven
“ Who brings to this Eternal Gate
“ The Gift that is most dear to Heaven !
“ Go, seek it, and redeem thy sin ;—
“ 'Tis sweet to let the pardon'd in !”

Rapidly as comets run
To th' embraces of the Sun—
Fleeter than the starry brands,
Flung at night from angel hands*
At those dark and daring sprites,
Who would climb th' empyreal heights—
Down the blue vault the PERI flies,
And, lighted earthward by a glance

* “ The Mahometans suppose that falling stars are the firebrands wherewith the good angels drive away the bad, when they approach too near the empyreum or verge of the Heavens.”—FRYER.

That just then broke from morning's eyes,
Hung hovering o'er our world's expanse.

But whither shall the Spirit go
To find this gift for Heaven?—"I know
"The wealth," she cries, "of every urn,
"In which unnumber'd rubies burn,
"Beneath the pillars of CHILMINAR;—*
"I know where the Isles of Perfume are
"Many a fathom down in the sea,
"To the south of sun-bright ARABY;—†
"I know too where the Genii hid
"The jewell'd cup of their King JAMSHID,§
"With Life's elixir sparkling high—
"But gifts like these are not for the sky.
"Where was there ever a gem that shone
"Like the steps of ALLA's wonderful Throne?

* The Forty Pillars; so the Persians call the ruins of Persepolis. It is imagined by them that this palace and the edifices at Balbec were built by Genii, for the purpose of hiding in their subterraneous caverns immense treasures, which still remain there.—D'HERBELOT, VOLNEY.

† The Isles of Panchaia.

§ "The cup of Jamshid, discovered, they say, when digging for the foundations of Persepolis."—RICHARDSON.

“ And the Drops of Life—oh ! what would they be

“ In the boundless Deep of Eternity ? ”

While thus she mused, her pinions fann'd
The air of that sweet Indian land,
Whose air is baln ; whose ocean spreads
O'er coral rocks and amber beds ;
Whose mountains, pregnant by the beam
Of the warm sun, with diamonds teem ;
Whose rivulets are like rich brides,
Lovely, with gold beneath their tides ;
Whose sandal groves and bowers of spice
Might be a Peri's Paradise !

But crimson now her rivers ran

With human blood—the smell of death
Came reeking from those spicy bowers,
And man, the sacrifice of man,

Mingled his taint with every breath
Upwafted from the innocent flowers !
Land of the Sun ! what foot invades
Thy Pagods and thy pillar'd shades—
Thy cavern shrines, and Idol stones,
Thy Monarchs and their thousand Thrones ?

'Tis He of GAZNA! *—fierce in wrath
He comes, and INDIA's diadems
Lie scatter'd in his ruinous path.—
His blood-hounds he adorns with gems,
Torn from the violated necks
Of many a young and loved Sultana;—†
Maidens within their pure Zenana,
Priests in the very fane he slaughters,
And choaks up with the glittering wrecks
Of golden shrines the sacred waters!

Downward the PERI turns her gaze,
And, through the war-field's bloody haze
Beholds a youthful warrior stand,
Alone, beside his native river,—
The red blade broken in his hand
And the last arrow in his quiver,

* Mahmood of Gazna, or Ghizni, who conquered India in the beginning of the eleventh century.—See his History in DOW and SIR J. MALCOLM.

† “It is reported that the hunting equipage of the Sultan Mahmoud was so magnificent, that he kept four hundred grey-hounds and blood-hounds, each of which wore a collar set with jewels, and a covering edged with gold and pearls.”—Universal History, vol. iii,

“ Live,” said the Conqueror, “ live to share

“ The trophies and the crowns I bear ! ”

Silent that youthful warrior stood—

Silent he pointed to the flood

All crimson with his country’s blood,

Then sent his last remaining dart,

For answer, to the Invader’s heart.

False flew the shaft, though pointed well ;

The Tyrant lived, the Hero fell !—

Yet mark’d the PERI where he lay,

And, when the rush of war was past,

Swiftly descending on a ray

Of morning light, she caught the last—

Last glorious drop his heart had shed,

Before its free-born spirit fled !

“ Be this,” she cried, as she wing’d her flight,

“ My welcome gift at the Gates of Light.

“ Though foul are the drops that oft distil

“ On the field of warfare, blood like this,

“ For Liberty shed, so holy is,

“ It would not stain the purest rill,

“ That sparkles among the Bowers of Bliss !

“ Oh ! if there be, on this earthly sphere,
“ A boon, an offering Heaven holds dear,
“ 'Tis the last libation Liberty draws
“ From the heart that bleeds and breaks in her cause ! ”

“ Sweet,” said the Angel, as she gave
 The gift into his radiant hand,
“ Sweet is our welcome of the Brave
 “ Who die thus for their native Land.—
“ But see—alas !—the crystal bar
“ Of Eden moves not—holier far
“ Than even this drop the boon must be,
“ That opes the Gates of Heaven for thee ! ”

Her first fond hope of Eden blighted,
 Now among AFRIC'S Lunar Mountains,*
Far to the South, the PERI lighted ;
 And sleek'd her plumage at the fountains
Of that Egyptian tide,—whose birth
Is hidden from the sons of earth,

* “ The Mountains of the Moon, or the Montes Lunæ of antiquity, at the foot of which the Nile is supposed to arise.”
—BRUCE.

Deep in those solitary woods,
 Where oft the Genii of the Floods
 Dance round the cradle of their Nile,
 And hail the new-born Giant's smile ! *
 Thence, over EGYPT's palmy groves,
 Her grots, and sepulchres of Kings, †
 The exiled Spirit sighing roves ;
 And now hangs listening to the doves
 In warm ROSETTA's vale §—now loves
 To watch the moonlight on the wings
 Of the white pelicans that break
 The azure calm of MOERIS' Lake. **
 'Twas a fair scene—a Land more bright
 Never did mortal eye behold !
 Who could have thought, that saw this night
 Those valleys and their fruits of gold
 Basking in Heaven's serenest light ;—

* “ The Nile, which the Abyssinians, know by the names of Abey and Alawy or the Giant.”—Asiat. Research. vol. i. p. 387.

† See PERRY'S View of the Levant for an account of the sepulchres in Upper Thebes, and the numberless grots, covered all over with hieroglyphics, in the mountains of Upper Egypt.

§ “ The orchards of Rosetta are filled with turtle-doves.”—SONNINI.

 SAVARY mentions the pelicans upon Lake Moeris.

Those groups of lovely date-trees bending
 Languidly their leaf-crown'd heads,
 Like youthful maids, when sleep descending
 Warns them to their silken beds ;—*

Those virgin lilies, all the night
 Bathing their beauties in the lake,
 That they may rise more fresh and bright,
 When their beloved Sun's awake ;—

Those ruin'd shrines and towers that seem
 The relics of a splendid dream ;

Amid whose fairy loneliness
 Nought but the lap-wing's cry is heard,
 Nought seen but (when the shadows, flitting
 Fast from the moon, unsheath its gleam)

Some purple-wing'd Sultana † sitting Upon a column, motionless
 And glittering, like an idol bird !—

* “ The superb date-tree, whose head languidly reclines, like that of a handsome woman overcome with sleep.”—
 DAFARD EL HADAD.

† “ That beautiful bird with plumage of the finest shining blue, with purple beak and legs, the natural and living ornament of the temples and palaces of the Greeks and Romans, which, from the stateliness of its port, as well as the brilliancy of its colours, has obtained the title of Sultana.”—SONNINI.

Who could have thought, that there, even there,
Amid those scenes so still and fair,

The Demon of the Plague hath cast
From his hot wing a deadlier blast,
More mortal far than ever came
From the red Desert's sands of flame !
So quick, that every living thing
Of human shape, touch'd by his wing,
Like plants where the Simoom hath past,
At once falls black and withering !

The sun went down on many a brow,
Which, full of bloom and freshness then,
Is rankling in the pest-house now,
And ne'er will feel that sun again !
And oh ! to see the unburied heaps
On which the lonely moonlight sleeps—
The very vultures turn away,
And sicken at so foul a prey !
Only the fierce hyæna stalks *
Throughout the city's desolate walks

* JACKSON, speaking of the plague that occurred in West Barbary, when he was there, says, "The birds of the air fled away from the abodes of men. The hyænas, on the contrary, visited the cemeteries," etc.

At midnight, and his carnage plies—
Woe to the half-dead wretch, who meets
The glaring of those large blue eyes*
Amid the darkness of the streets!

“Poor race of Men!” said the pitying Spirit,
“Dearly ye pay for your primal Fall—
“Some flowerets of Eden ye still inherit,
“But the trail of the Serpent is over them all!”
She wept—the air grew pure and clear
Around her, as the bright drops ran;
For there’s a magic in each tear
Such kindly Spirits weep for man!

Just then beneath some orange trees,
Whose fruit and blossoms in the breeze
Were wantoning together, free,
Like age at play with infancy—
Beneath that fresh and springing bower,
Close by the Lake, she heard the moan
Of one who, at this silent hour,
Had thither stolen to die alone.

* BRUCE.

One who in life, where'er he moved,
Drew after him the hearts of many ;
Yet now, as though he ne'er were loved,
Dies here, unseen, unwept by any !
None to watch near him—none to slake
The fire that in his bosom lies,
With even a sprinkle from that lake
Which shines so cool before his eyes.
No voice, well-known through many a day,
To speak the last, the parting word,
Which, when all other sounds decay,
Is still like distant music heard :
That tender farewell on the shore
Of this rude world, when all is o'er,
Which cheers the spirit, ere its bark
Puts off into the unknown Dark.

Deserted youth ! one thought alone
Shed joy around his soul in death—
That she, whom he for years had known,
And loved, and might have call'd his own,
Was safe from this foul midnight's breath ;—
Safe in her father's princely halls,
Where the cool airs from fountain falls,

Freshly perfumed by many a brand
Of the sweet wood from India's land,
Were pure as she whose brow they fann'd.

But see,—who yonder comes by stealth,

 This melancholy bower to seek,
Like a young envoy, sent by Health,
 With rosy gifts upon her cheek?

'Tis she—far off, through moonlight dim,

 He knew his own betrothed bride,
She, who would rather die with him,

 Than live to gain the world beside!—
Her arms are round her lover now,

 His livid cheek to hers she presses,
And dips, to bind his burning brow,

 In the cool lake her loosen'd tresses.

Ah! once, how little did he think

An hour would come when he should shrink
With horror from that dear embrace,

 Those gentle arms, that were to him
Holy as is the cradling place

 Of Eden's infant cherubim!

And now he yields—now turns away,
Shuddering as if the venom lay

All in those proffer'd lips alone—
Those lips that, then so fearless grown,
Never until that instant came
Near his unask'd or without shame.
“ Oh ! let me only breathe the air,
“ The blessed air, that's breathed by thee,
“ And, whether on its wings it bear
“ Healing or death, 'tis sweet to me !
“ There,—drink my tears, while yet they fall,—
“ Would that my bosom's blood were balm,
“ And, well thou know'st, I'd shed it all,
“ To give thy brow one minute's calm.
“ Nay, turn not from me that dear face—
“ Am I not thine—thy own loved bride—
“ The one, the chosen one, whose place
“ In life or death is by thy side !
“ Think'st thou that she, whose only light,
“ In this dim world, from thee hath shone,
“ Could bear the long, the cheerless night,
“ That must be hers when thou art gone ?
“ That I can live, and let thee go,
“ Who art my life itself?—No, no—
“ When the stem dies, the leaf that grew
“ Out of its heart must perish too !

“ Then turn to me, my own love, turn,
“ Before like thee I fade and burn ;
“ Cling to these yet cool lips, and share
“ The last pure life that lingers there !”

She fails—she sinks—as dies the lamp
In charnel airs or cavern-damp,
So quickly do his baleful sighs
Quench all the sweet light of her eyes !

One struggle—and his pain is past—

Her lover is no longer living !

One kiss the maiden gives, one last,

Long kiss, which she expires in giving !

“ Sleep,” said the PERI, as softly she stole
The farewell sigh of that vanishing soul,
As true as e’er warm’d a woman’s breast—

“ Sleep on, in visions of odour rest,

“ In balmier airs than ever yet stirr’d

“ Th’ enchanted pile of that lonely bird,

“ Who sings at the last his own death lay, *

“ And in music and perfume dies away !”

* “ In the East, they suppose the phoenix to have fifty orifices in his bill, which are continued to his tail; and that, after living one thousand years, he builds himself a funeral pile, sings a melodious air of different harmonies through his

Thus saying, from her lips she spread
Unearthly breathings through the place,
And shook her sparkling wreath, and shed
Such lustre o'er each paly face,
That like two lovely saints they seem'd
Upon the eve of dooms-day taken
From their dim graves, in odour sleeping;—
While that benevolent PERI beam'd
Like their good angel, calmly keeping
Watch o'er them till their souls would waken!

But morn is blushing in the sky;
Again the PERI soars above,
Bearing to Heaven that precious sigh
Of pure, self-sacrificing love.
High throb'd her heart, with hope elate,
The Elysian palm she soon shall win,
For the bright Spirit at the gate
Smiled as she gave that offering in;
And she already hears the trees
Of Eden, with their crystal bells

fifty organ pipes, flaps his wings with a velocity which sets fire to the wood, and consumes himself."—RICHARDSON,

Ring in that ambrosial breeze
That from the Throne of ALLA swells ;
And she can see the starry bowls
That lie around that lucid lake,
Upon whose banks admitted Souls
Their first sweet draught of glory take ! *

But ah ! even Peris' hopes are vain—
Again the Fates forbade, again
The immortal barrier closed—"not yet,"
The Angel said as, with regret,
He shut from her that glimpse of glory—
"True was the maiden, and her story,
"Written in light o'er ALLA's head,
"By seraph eyes shall long be read.
"But, PERI, see—the crystal bar
"Of Eden moves not—holier far
"Than even this sigh the boon must be
"That opes the Gates of Heaven for thee."

* "On the shores of a quadrangular lake stand a thousand goblets, made of stars, out of which souls predestined to enjoy felicity drink the crystal wave."—From CHATEAUBRIAND'S Description of the Mahometan Paradise, in his Beauties of Christianity.

Now, upon SYRIA's land of roses *
Softly the light of Eve reposes,
And, like a glory, the broad sun
Hangs over sainted LEBANON,
Whose head in wintry grandeur towers,
And whitens with eternal sleet,
While summer, in a vale of flowers,
Is sleeping rosy at his feet.

To one who look'd from upper air
O'er all the enchanted regions there,
How beauteous must have been the glow,
The life, the sparkling from below !
Fair gardens, shining streams, with ranks
Of golden melons on their banks,
More golden where the sun-light falls ;—
Gay lizards, glittering on the walls †

* RICHARDSON thinks that Syria had its name from Suri, a beautiful and delicate species of rose for which that country has been always famous;—hence, Suristan, the Land of Roses.

† “ The number of lizards I saw one day in the great court of the Temple of the Sun at Balbec, amounted to many thousands; the ground, the walls, and stones of the ruined buildings, were covered with them.”—BRUCE.

Of ruin'd shrines, busy and bright
As they were all alive with light ;—
And, yet more splendid, numerous flocks
Of pigeons, settling on the rocks,
With their rich restless wings, that gleam
Variously in the crimson beam
Of the warm west—as if inlaid
With brilliants from the mine, or made
Of tearless rainbows, such as span
The unclouded skies of PERISTAN !
And then, the mingling sounds that come,
Of shepherd's ancient reed,* with hum
Of the wild bees of PALESTINE,
 Banquetting through the flowery vales ;—
And, JORDAN, those sweet banks of thine,
 And woods, so full of nightingales !

But nought can charm the luckless PERI ;
Her soul is sad—her wings are weary—
Joyless she sees the sun look down
On that great Temple, once his own, †

* “ The Syrinx, or Pan's pipe, is still a pastoral instrument in Syria.”—RUSSEL.

† The Temple of the Sun at Balbec.

Whose lonely columns stand sublime,
Flinging their shadows from on high,
Like dials, which the wizard, Time,
Had raised to count his ages by!

Yet haply there may lie conceal'd,
Beneath those Chambers of the Sun,
Some amulet of gems, anneal'd
In upper fires, some tablet seal'd
With the great name of SOLOMON,
Which, spell'd by her illumined eyes,
May teach her where, beneath the moon,
In earth or ocean lies the boon,
The charm that can restore so soon,
An erring Spirit to the skies!

Cheer'd by this hope, she bends her thither;
Still laughs the radiant eye of Heaven,
Nor have the golden bowers of Even
In the rich West begun to wither;—
When, o'er the vale of BALBEC winging
Slowly, she sees a child at play,
Among the rosy wild-flowers singing,
As rosy and as wild as they;

Chasing, with eager hands and eyes,
The beautiful blue damsel-flies, *
That flutter'd round the jasmine stems,
Like winged flowers or flying gems:—
And, near the boy, who tired with play
Now nestling 'mid the roses lay,
She saw a wearied man dismount

From his hot steed, and on the brink
Of a small imaret's rustic fount

Impatient fling him down to drink.
Then swift his haggard brow he turn'd

To the fair child, who fearless sat,
Though never yet hath day-beam burn'd

Upon a brow more fierce than that,—
Sullenly fierce—a mixture dire,
Like thunder-clouds, of gloom and fire !
In which the PERI's eye could read
Dark tales of many a ruthless deed ;
The ruin'd maid—the shrine profaned—
Oaths broken—and the threshold stain'd

* “ You behold there a considerable number of a remarkable species of beautiful insects, the elegance of whose appearance and their attire procured for them the name of Damsels.”— SONNINI.

With blood of guests!—there written, all,
Black as the damning drops that fall
From the denouncing Angel's pen,
Ere mercy weeps them out again!

Yet tranquil now that man of crime
(As if the balmy evening time
Softened his spirit) look'd and lay,
Watching the rosy infant's play:—
Though still, whene'er his eye by chance
Fell on the boy's, its lurid glance

Met that unclouded, joyous gaze,
As torches, that have burnt all night
Through some impure and godless rite,
Encounter morning's glorious rays.

But hark! the vesper-call to prayer,
As slow the orb of day-light sets,
Is rising sweetly on the air,
From SYRIA's thousand minarets!

The boy has started from the bed
Of flowers, where he had laid his head,

And down upon the fragrant sod
Kneels, with his forehead to the south,
Lisping th' eternal name of God
From purity's own cherub mouth,
And looking, while his hands and eyes
Are lifted to the glowing skies,
Like a stray babe of Paradise,
Just lighted on that flowery plain,
And seeking for its home again!
Oh 'twas a sight—that Heaven—that Child—
A scene, which might have well beguiled
Even haughty EBLIS of a sigh
For glories lost and peace gone by!

And how felt he, the wretched Man
Reclining there—while memory ran
O'er many a year of guilt and strife,
Flew o'er the dark flood of his life,
Nor found one sunny resting-place,
Nor brought him back one branch of grace!
“There was a time,” he said in mild,
Heart-humbled tones—“thou blessed child!
“When young and haply pure as thou,
“I look'd and pray'd like thee—but now—”

He hung his head—each nobler aim
And hope and feeling, which had slept
From boyhood's hour, that instant came
Fresh o'er him, and he wept—he wept!

Blest tears of soul-felt penitence!
In whose benign, redeeming flow
Is felt the first, the only sense
Of guiltless joy that guilt can know.

“There's a drop,” said the PERI, “that down from the moon
“Falls through the withering airs of June
“Upon EGYPT's land,* of so healing a power,
“So balmy a virtue, that even in the hour
“That drop descends, contagion dies,
“And health reanimates earth and skies!—
“Oh, is it not thus, thou man of sin,
“The precious tears of repentance fall?
“Though foul thy fiery plagues within,
“One heavenly drop hath dispell'd them all!”

* The Nucta, or Miraculous Drop, which falls in Egypt precisely on Saint John's day, in June, and is supposed to have the effect of stopping the plague.

And now—behold him kneeling there
By the child's side, in humble prayer,
While the same sun-beam shines upon
The guilty and the guiltless one,
And hymns of joy proclaim through Heaven
The triumph of a Soul Forgiven!

'Twas when the golden orb had set,
While on their knees they linger'd yet,
There fell a light, more lovely far
Than ever came from sun or star,
Upon the tear that, warm and meek,
Dew'd that repentant sinner's cheek :
To mortal eye this light might seem
A northern flash or meteor beam—
But well the enraptured PERI knew
'Twas a bright smile the Angel threw
From Heaven's gate, to hail that tear
Her harbinger of glory near!

“ Joy, joy for ever! my task is done—

“ The Gates are pass'd, and Heaven is won!

“ Oh! am I not happy? I am, I am—

“ To thee, sweet Eden! how dark and sad

“ Are the diamond turrets of SHADUKIAM, *
“ And the fragrant bowers of AMBERABAD !

“ Farewell, ye odours of Earth, that die,
“ Passing away like a lover's sigh ;—
“ My feast is now of the Tooba-Tree, †
“ Whose scent is the breath of Eternity !

“ Farewell, ye vanishing flowers, that shone
“ In my fairy wreath, so bright and brief,—
“ Oh ! what are the brightest that e'er have blown,
“ To the lote-tree, springing by ALLA's Throne, §
“ Whose flowers have a soul in every leaf ?
“ Joy, joy for ever !—my task is done—
“ The Gates are pass'd, and Heaven is won !”

* The Country of Delight,—the name of a Province in the kingdom of Jinnistan, or Fairy Land, the capital of which is called the City of Jewels. Amberabad is another of the cities of Jinnistan.

† The tree Tooba, that stands in Paradise, in the palace of Mahomet. See SALE's Prelim. Disc.—“ Touba,” says D'HERBELOT, “ signifies beatitude, or eternal happiness.”

§ Mahomet is described, in the 53d Chapter of the Koran, as having seen the angel Gabriel “ by the lote-tree, beyond which there is no passing : near it is the Garden of Eternal Abode.” This tree, say the Commentators, stands in the seventh Heaven, on the right hand of the throne of God.

“AND this,” said the Great Chamberlain, “is poetry! this flimsy manufacture of the brain, which, in comparison with the lofty and durable monuments of genius, is as the gold filigree-work of Zamara beside the eternal architecture of Egypt!” After this gorgeous sentence, which, with a few more of the same kind, FADLADEEN kept by him for rare and important occasions, he proceeded to the anatomy of the short poem just recited. The lax and easy kind of metre in which it was written ought to be denounced, he said, as one of the leading causes of the alarming growth of poetry in our times. If some check were not given to this lawless facility, we should soon be overrun by a race of bards as numerous and as shallow as the hundred and twenty thousand Streams of Basra.* They who succeeded in this style deserved chastisement for their very success ; —as warriors have been punished, even after gaining a victory, because they had taken the liberty of gaining it in an irregular or unestablished manner. What, then, was to be said to those who failed ? to those who presumed, as in the present lamentable instance, to imitate the license and ease of the bolder sons of song, without any of that grace or vigour which gave a dignity even to negligence ; —who, like them, flung the jereed * carelessly, but not, like them, to the mark ; —“ and who,” said he, raising his voice to excite a proper degree of wakefulness in his hearers, “ contrive to appear heavy and constrained in the midst of all the latitude they have allowed themselves, like one of those young pagans that dance before the Princess, who has the ingenuity to move as if her limbs were fettered, in a pair of the lightest and loosest drawers of Masulipatam !”

* “It is said that the rivers or streams of Basra were reckoned in the time of Belal ben Abi Bordeh, and amounted to the number of one hundred and twenty thousand streams.”—EBN HAUKAL.

It was but little suitable, he continued, to the grave march of criticism to follow this fantastical Peri, of whom they had just heard, through all her flights and adventures between earth and heaven ; but he could not help adverting to the puerile conceitedness of the Three Gifts which she is supposed to carry to the skies:—a drop of blood, forsooth, a sigh, and a tear ! How the first of these articles was delivered into the Angel's " radiant hand" he professed himself at a loss to discover ; and as to the safe carriage of the sigh and the tear, such Peris and such poets were beings by far too incomprehensible for him even to guess how they managed such matters. " But, in short," said he, " it is a waste of time and patience to dwell longer upon a thing so incurably frivolous,—puny even among its own puny race, and such as only the Banyan Hospital for Sick Insects* should undertake."

* The name of the javelin with which the Easterns exercise. See CASTELLAN, Mœurs des Othomans, tom. iii. p. 161.

In vain did LALLA ROOKH try to soften this inexorable critic ; in vain did she resort to her most eloquent common-places,—reminding him that poets were a timid and sensitive race, whose sweetness was not to be drawn forth, like that of the fragrant grass near the Ganges, by crushing and trampling upon them ;—that severity often destroyed every chance of the perfection which it demanded ; and that, after all, perfection was like the Mountain of the Talisman,—no one had ever yet reached its summit.* Neither these gentle axioms, nor the still gentler looks with which they were inculcated, could lower for one instant the elevation of FADLADEEN'S eye-brows, or charm him into any thing like encouragement or even toleration of her poet. Toleration, indeed, was not among the weaknesses of FADLADEEN :—he carried the same spirit into matters of poetry and of religion, and, though little versed in the beauties or sublimities of either, was a perfect master of the art of persecution in both. His zeal, too, was the same in either pursuit ; whether the game before him was pagans or poetasters,—worshippers of cows, or writers of epics.

* For a description of this Hospital of the Banyans, see PARSON'S Travels, p. 262.

They had now arrived at the splendid city of Lahore, whose mausoleums and shrines, magnificent and numberless, where Death seemed to share

* “ Near this is a curious hill, called Koh Talism, the Mountain of the Talisman, because, according to the traditions of the country, no person ever succeeded in gaining its summit.”—KINNEIR.

equal honours with Heaven, would have powerfully affected the heart and imagination of LALLA ROOKH, if feelings more of this earth had not taken entire possession of her already. She was here met by messengers, dispatched from Cashmere, who informed her that the king had arrived in the Valley, and was himself superintending the sumptuous preparations that were making in the Saloons of the Shalimar for her reception. The chill she felt on receiving this intelligence,—which to a bride whose heart was free and light would have brought only images of affection and pleasure,—convinced her that her peace was gone for ever, and that she was in love, irretrievably in love, with young FERAMORZ. The veil, which this passion wears at first, had fallen off, and to know that she loved was now as painful as to love without knowing it had been delicious. FERAMORZ too,—what misery would be his, if the sweet hours of intercourse so imprudently allowed them should have stolen into his heart the same fatal fascination as into hers;—if, notwithstanding her rank, and the modest homage he always paid to it, even he should have yielded to the influence of those long and happy interviews, where music, poetry, the delightful scenes of nature,—all tended to bring their hearts close together, and to waken by every means that too ready passion, which often, like the young of the desert-bird, is warmed into life by the eyes alone! * She saw but one way to preserve herself from being culpable as well as unhappy, and this, however painful, she was resolved to adopt. FERAMORZ must no more be admitted to her presence. To have strayed so far into the dangerous labyrinth was wrong, but to linger in it, while the clew was yet in her hand, would be criminal. Though the heart she had to offer to the King of Bucharia might be cold and broken, it should at least be pure; and she must only try to forget the short vision of happiness she had enjoyed,—like that Arabian shepherd, who, in wandering into the wilderness, caught a glimpse of the Gardens of Irim, and then lost them again for ever! †

The arrival of the young Bride at Lahore was

* The Arabians believe that the ostriches hatch their young by only looking at them.—P. VANSLEBE, Relat. d'Égypte.

† See SALE's Koran, note, vol. ii. p. 484.

celebrated in the most enthusiastic manner. The Rajas and Omras in her train, who had kept at a certain distance during the journey, and never encamped nearer to the Princess than was strictly necessary for her safeguard, here rode in splendid cavalcade through the city, and distributed the most costly presents to the crowd. Engines were erected in all the squares, which cast forth showers of confectionary among the people; while the artisans, in chariots adorned with tinsel and flying streamers, exhibited the badges of their respective trades through the streets. Such brilliant displays of life and pageantry among the palaces, and domes, and gilded minarets of Lahore, made the city altogether like a place of enchantment;—particularly on the day when LALLA ROOKH set out again upon her journey, when she was accompanied to the gate by all the fairest and richest of the nobility, and rode along between ranks of beautiful boys and girls, who waved plates of gold and silver flowers over their heads* as they went, and then threw them to be gathered by the populace.

For many days after their departure from La-

* Ferishta.

hore a considerable degree of gloom hung over the whole party. LALLA ROOKH, who had intended to make illness her excuse for not admitting the young minstrel, as usual, to the pavilion, soon found that to feign indisposition was unnecessary; —FADLADEEN felt the loss of the good road they had hitherto travelled, and was very near cursing Jehan-Guire (of blessed memory!) for not having continued his delectable alley of trees,* at least as far as the mountains of Cashmere;—while the Ladies, who had nothing now to do all day but to be fanned by peacocks' feathers and listen to FADLADEEN, seemed heartily weary of the life they led, and, in spite of all the Great Chamberlain's criticism, were tasteless enough to wish for the poet again. One evening, as they were proceeding to their place of rest for the night, the Princess, who, for the freer enjoyment of the air, had mounted her favourite Arabian palfrey, in passing by a small grove heard the notes of a lute from within its leaves, and a voice, which she but too well knew, singing the following words:—

* The fine road made by the Emperor Jehan-Guire from Agra to Lahore, planted with trees on each side.

Tell me not of joys above,
If that world can give no bliss,
Truer, happier than the Love
Which enslaves our souls in this !

Tell me not of Houris' eyes ;—
Far from me their dangerous glow,
If those looks that light the skies
Would like some that burn below !

Who that feels what Love is here,
All its falsehood—all its pain—
Would, for even Elysium's sphere,
Risk the fatal dream again ?

Who, that 'midst a desert's heat
Sees the waters fade away,
Would not rather die than meet
Streams again as false as they ?

The tone of melancholy defiance in which these words were uttered, went to LALLA ROOKH'S heart ;—and, as she reluctantly rode on, she could not help feeling it as a sad but sweet certainty, that FERAMORZ was to the full as enamoured and miserable as herself.

The place where they encamped that evening was the first delightful spot they had come to since they left Lahore. On one side of them was a grove full of small Hindoo temples, and planted with the most graceful trees of the East; where the tamarind, the cassia, and the silken plantains of Ceylon were mingled in rich contrast with the high fan-like foliage of the Palmyra,—that favourite tree of the luxurious bird that lights up the chambers of its nest with fire-flies.* In the middle of the lawn where the pavilion stood there was a tank surrounded by small mangoe-trees, on the clear cold waters of which floated multitudes of the beautiful red lotus; while at a distance stood the ruins of a strange and awful-looking tower, which seemed old enough to have been the temple of some religion no longer known, and which spoke the voice of desolation in the midst of all that bloom and loveliness. This singular ruin excited the wonder and conjectures of all. LALLA ROOKH guessed in vain, and the all-pretending FADLADEEN, who had never till this journey been beyond the precincts of Delhi, was proceeding most learnedly to show that he knew nothing whatever about the matter, when one of the Ladies suggested, that perhaps FERAMORZ could satisfy their curiosity. They were now approaching his native mountains, and this tower might be a relic of some of those dark superstitions, which had prevailed in that country before the light of Islam dawned upon it. The Chamberlain, who usually preferred his own ignorance to the best knowledge that any one else could give him, was by no means pleased with this officious reference; and the Princess, too, was about to interpose a faint word of objection, but, before either of them could speak, a slave was dispatched for FERAMORZ, who, in a very few minutes, appeared before them,—looking so pale and unhappy in LALLA ROOKH'S eyes, that she already repented of her cruelty in having so long excluded him.

* The Baya, or Indian Gross-Beak.—SIR W. JONES.

That venerable tower, he told them, was the remains of an ancient Fire-Temple, built by those Ghebers or Persians of the old religion; who, many hundred years since, had fled hither from their Arab conquerors, preferring liberty and their altars in a foreign land to the alternative of apostacy or persecution in their own. It was impossible, he added, not to feel interested in the many glorious but unsuccessful struggles, which had been made by these original natives of Persia to cast off the yoke of their bigoted conquerors. Like their own Fire in the Burning Field at Bakou,* when suppressed in one place, they had but broken out with fresh flame in another; and, as a native of Cashmere, of that fair and Holy Valley, which had in the same manner become the prey of strangers, and seen her ancient shrines and native princes swept away before the march of her intolerant invaders, he felt a sympathy, he owned, with the sufferings of the persecuted Ghebers, which every monument like this before them but tended more powerfully to awaken.

It was the first time that FERAMORZ had ever ventured upon so much prose before FADLADEEN, and it may easily be conceived what effect such prose as this must have produced upon that most orthodox and most pagan-hating personage. He sat for some minutes aghast, ejaculating only at intervals “Bigoted conquerors!—sympathy with Fire-worshippers!”—while FERAMORZ, happy to take advantage of this almost speechless horror of the Chamberlain, proceeded to say that he knew a melancholy story, connected with the events of one of those brave struggles of the Fire-worshippers of Persia against their Arab masters, which, if the evening was not too far advanced, he should have much pleasure in being allowed to relate to the Princess. It was impossible for LALLA ROOKH to refuse;—he had never before looked half so animated, and when he spoke of the Holy Valley his eyes had sparkled, she thought, like the talismanic characters on the scimitar of Solomon. Her consent was therefore most readily granted, and while FADLADEEN sat in unspeakable dismay, expecting treason and abomination in every line, the poet thus began his story of the Fire-worshippers:—

* The “Agar ardens,” described by KEMPFER, Amœnitat. Exot.

THE FIRE-WORSHIPPERS.

'Tis moonlight over OMAN's Sea ; *

Her banks of pearl and palmy isles
Bask in the night-beam beauteously,
And her blue waters sleep in smiles.

'Tis moonlight in HARMOZIA's† walls,
And through her EMIR's porphyry halls,
Where, some hours since, was heard the swell
Of trumpet and the clash of zel, §
Bidding the bright-eyed sun farewell ;—
The peaceful sun, whom better suits
The music of the bulbul's nest,
Or the light touch of lovers' lutes,
To sing him to his golden rest !

* The Persian Gulf, sometimes so called, which separates the shores of Persia and Arabia.

† The present Gombaroon, a town on the Persian side of the Gulf.

§ A Moorish instrument of music.

All hush'd—there's not a breeze in motion;
The shore is silent as the ocean.
If zephyrs come, so light they come,
Nor leaf is stirr'd nor wave is driven;
The wind-tower on the EMIR'S dome*
Can hardly win a breath from heaven.

Even he, that tyrant Arab, sleeps
Calm, while a nation round him weeps;
While curses load the air he breathes,
And falchions from unnumber'd sheaths
Are starting to avenge the shame
His race hath brought on IRAN'S† name.
Hard, heartless Chief, unmoved alike
'Mid eyes that weep and swords that strike;—
One of that saintly, murderous brood,
To carnage and the Koran given,
Who think through unbelievers' blood
Lies their directest path to Heaven.

* “ At Gombaroon, and other places in Persia, they have towers for the purpose of catching the wind, and cooling the houses.”—LE BRUYN.

† “ Iran is the true general name for the empire of Persia.”
—Asiat. Res. Disc. 5.

One, who will pause and kneel unshod
In the warm blood his hand hath pour'd,
To mutter o'er some text of God
Engraven on his reeking sword;—*
Nay, who can coolly note the line,
The letter of those words divine,
To which his blade, with searching art,
Had sunk into its victim's heart!

Just ALLA! what must be thy look,
When such a wretch before thee stands
Unblushing, with thy Sacred Book,—
Turning the leaves with blood-stain'd hands,
And wresting from its page sublime
His creed of lust and hate and crime?
Even as those bees of TREBIZOND,—
Which from the sunniest flowers that glad
With their pure smile the gardens round,
Draw venom forth that drives men mad! †

* “On the blades of their scimitars some verse from the Koran is usually inscribed.”—RUSSEL.

† “There is a kind of Rhododendros about Trebizond, whose flowers the bee feeds upon, and the honey thence drives people mad.”—TOURNEFORT.

Never did fierce ARABIA send
A satrap forth more direly great ;
Never was IRAN doom'd to bend
Beneath a yoke of deadlier weight.
Her throne had fallen—her pride was crush'd—
Her sons were willing slaves, nor blush'd,
In their own land,—no more their own,—
To crouch beneath a stranger's throne.
Her towers, where MITHRA once had burn'd,
To Moslem shrines—oh shame !—were turn'd,
Where slaves, converted by the sword,
Their mean, apostate worship pour'd,
And cursed the faith their sires adored.
Yet has she hearts, 'mid all this ill,
O'er all this wreck high buoyant still
With hope and vengeance ;—hearts that yet,—
Like gems, in darkness issuing rays
They've treasured from the sun that's set,—
Beam all the light of long-lost days !
And swords she hath, nor weak nor slow
To second all such hearts can dare ;
As he shall know, well, dearly know,
Who sleeps in moonlight luxury there,

Tranquil as if his spirit lay
Becalm'd in Heaven's approving ray !
Sleep on—for purer eyes than thine
Those waves are hush'd, those planets shine.
Sleep on, and be thy rest unmoved
By the white moon-beam's dazzling power ;—
None but the loving and the loved
Should be awake at this sweet hour.

And see—where, high above those rocks
That o'er the deep their shadows fling,
Yon turret stands ;—where ebon locks,
As glossy as a heron's wing
Upon the turban of a king, *
Hang from the lattice, long and wild,—
'Tis she, that EMIR's blooming child,
All truth and tenderness and grace,
Though born of such ungente race ;—
An image of Youth's radiant Fountain
Springing in a desolate mountain ! †

* “ Their kings wear plumes of black herons' feathers upon the right side, as a badge of sovereignty.”—HANWAY.

† “ The Fountain of Youth, by a Mahometan tradition, is situated in some dark region of the East.”—RICHARDSON.

Oh, what a pure and sacred thing
Is Beauty, curtain'd from the sight
Of the gross world, illumining
One only mansion with her light !
Unseen by man's disturbing eye,—
The flower, that blooms beneath the sea
Too deep for sunbeams, doth not lie
Hid in more chaste obscurity !
So, HINDA, have thy face and mind,
Like holy mysteries, lain enshrined.
And oh what transport for a lover
To lift the veil that shades them o'er !—
Like those who, all at once, discover
In the lone deep some fairy shore,
Where mortal never trod before,
And sleep and wake in scented airs
No lip had ever breathed but theirs !
Beautiful are the maids that glide,
On summer-eves, through YEMEN's * dales,
And bright the glancing looks they hide
Behind their litters' roseate veils ;—

* Arabia Felix.

And brides, as delicate and fair
As the white jasmine flowers they wear,
Hath YEMEN in her blissful clime,
Who, lull'd in cool kiosk or bower,
Before their mirrors count the time,
And grow still lovelier every hour.
But never yet hath bride or maid
In ARABY'S gay Harams smiled,
Whose boasted brightness would not fade
Before AL HASSAN'S blooming child.

Light as the angel shapes that bless
An infant's dream, yet not the less
Rich in all woman's loveliness ;—
With eyes so pure, that from their ray
Dark Vice would turn abash'd away,
Blinded, like serpents when they gaze
Upon the emerald's virgin blaze !—*
Yet, fill'd with all youth's sweet desires,
Mingling the meek and vestal fires

* “ They say that if a snake or serpent fix his eyes on the lustre of those stones (emeralds), he immediately becomes blind.”—AHMED BEN ABDALAZIZ, Treatise on Jewels.

Of other worlds with all the bliss,
The fond, weak tenderness of this!
A soul, too, more than half divine,
Where, through some shades of earthly feeling,
Religion's soften'd glories shine,
Like light through summer foliage stealing,
Shedding a glow of such mild hue,
So warm, and yet so shadowy too,
As makes the very darkness there
More beautiful than light elsewhere!

Such is the maid who, at this hour,
Hath risen from her restless sleep,
And sits alone in that high bower,
Watching the still and shining deep.
Ah! 'twas not thus,—with tearful eyes
And beating heart,—she used to gaze
On the magnificent earth and skies,
In her own land, in happier days.
Why looks she now so anxious down
Among those rocks, whose rugged frown
Blackens the mirror of the deep?
Whom waits she all this lonely night?

Too rough the rocks, too bold the steep,
For man to scale that turret's height!—

So deem'd at least her thoughtful sire,

When high, to catch the cool night-air,
After the day-beam's withering fire, *

He built her bower of freshness there,
And had it deck'd with costliest skill,

And fondly thought it safe as fair:—
Think, reverend dreamer! think so still,

Nor wake to learn what Love can dare—
Love, all-defying Love, who sees

No charm in trophies won with ease;—

Whose rarest, dearest fruits of bliss

Are pluck'd on Danger's precipice!

Bolder than they, who dare not dive

For pearls, but when the sea's at rest,

Love, in the tempest most alive,

Hath ever held that pearl the best

He finds beneath the stormiest water!

Yes—ARABY'S unrivall'd daughter,

* At Gombaroon and the Isle of Ormus it is sometimes so hot that the people are obliged to lie all day in the water.—
MARCO POLO.

Though high that tower, that rock-way rude,
There's one who, but to kiss thy cheek,
Would climb th' untrodden solitude
Of ARARAT'S tremendous peak,*
And think its steeps, though dark and dread,
Heaven's path-ways, if to thee they led !
Even now thou seest the flashing spray,
That lights his oar's impatient way ;
Even now thou hear'st the sudden shock
Of his swift bark against the rock,
And stretchest down thy arms of snow,
As if to lift him from below !
Like her to whom, at dead of night,
The bridegroom, with his locks of light, †
Came, in the flush of love and pride,
And scaled the terrace of his bride ;—
When, as she saw him rashly spring,
And mid-way up in danger cling,

* This mountain is generally supposed to be inaccessible.

† In one of the books of the Shâh Nâhmeh, when Zal (a celebrated hero of Persia, remarkable for his white hair) comes to the terrace of his mistress, Rodahver, at night, she lets down her long tresses to assist him in his ascent ;—he, however, manages it in a less romantic way, by fixing his crook in a projecting beam.—See CHAMPION'S Ferdosi.

She flung him down her long black hair,
Exclaiming, breathless, "There, love, there!"

And scarce did manlier nerve uphold

The hero ZAL in that fond hour,
Than wings the youth who fleet and bold

Now climbs the rocks to HINDA'S bower.

See—light as up their granite steeps

The rock-goats of ARABIA clamber, *

Fearless from crag to crag he leaps,

And now is in the maiden's chamber.

She loves—but knows not whom she loves,

Nor what his race, nor whence he came;—

Like one who meets, in Indian groves,

Some beauteous bird, without a name,

Brought by the last ambrosial breeze,

From isles in the undiscover'd seas,

To show his plumage for a day

To wondering eyes, and wing away!

Will he thus fly—her nameless lover?

Alla forbid! 'twas by a moon

* "On the lofty hills of Arabia Petraea are rock-goats."— NIEBUHR.

As fair as this, while singing over
Some ditty to her soft Kanoon, *
Alone, at this same witching hour,
She first beheld his radiant eyes
Gleam through the lattice of the bower,
Where nightly now they mix their sighs;
And thought some spirit of the air
(For what could waft a mortal there?)
Was pausing on his moonlight way
To listen to her lonely lay!
This fancy ne'er hath left her mind:
And—though, when terror's swoon had past,
She saw a youth, of mortal kind,
Before her in obeisance cast,—
Yet often since, when he hath spoken
Strange, awful words,—and gleams have broken
From his dark eyes, too bright to bear,
Oh! she hath fear'd her soul was given
To some unhallow'd child of air,
Some erring Spirit, cast from Heaven,

* “Canun, espèce de psalterion, avec des cordes de boyaux; les dames en touchent dans le serrail, avec des décailles, armées de pointes de coco.”—TODERINI, translated by DE Cournand.

Like those angelic youths of old,
Who burn'd for maids of mortal mould,
Bewilder'd left the glorious skies,
And lost their Heaven for woman's eyes !

Fond girl ! nor fiend nor angel he,
Who woos thy young simplicity ;
But one of earth's impassion'd sons,
As warm in love, as fierce in ire,
As the best heart whose current runs
Full of the Day-God's living fire !

But quench'd to-night that ardour seems,
And pale his cheek, and sunk his brow ;—
Never before, but in her dreams,
Had she beheld him pale as now :
And those were dreams of troubled sleep,
From which 'twas joy to wake and weep ;
Visions, that will not be forgot,
But sadden every waking scene,
Like warning ghosts, that leave the spot
All wither'd where they once have been !

“ How sweetly,” said the trembling maid,
Of her own gentle voice afraid,

So long had they in silence stood,
Looking upon that tranquil flood—

“ How sweetly does the moon-beam smile

“ To-night upon yon leafy isle !

“ Oft, in my fancy’s wanderings,

“ I’ve wish’d that little isle had wings,

“ And we, within its fairy bowers,

“ Were wafted off to seas unknown,

“ Where not a pulse should beat but ours,

“ And we might live, love, die alone !

“ Far from the cruel and the cold,—

“ Where the bright eyes of angels only

“ Should come around us, to behold

“ A paradise so pure and lonely !

“ Would this be world enough for thee ?—”

Playful she turn’d, that he might see

The passing smile her cheek put on ;

But when she mark’d how mournfully

His eyes met hers, that smile was gone ;

And, bursting into heart-felt tears,

“ Yes, yes,” she cried, “ my hourly fears,

“ My dreams have boded all too right—

“ We part—for ever part—to-night !

- “ I knew, I knew it could not last—
“ ’Twas bright, ’twas heavenly, but ’tis past !
“ Oh ! ever thus, from childhood’s hour,
“ I’ve seen my fondest hopes decay ;
“ I never loved a tree or flower,
“ But ’twas the first to fade away.
“ I never nursed a dear gazelle,
“ To glad me with its soft black eye,
“ But when it came to know me well,
“ And love me, it was sure to die !
“ Now too—the joy most like divine
“ Of all I ever dreamt or knew,
“ To see thee, hear thee, call thee mine,—
“ Oh, misery ! must I lose that too ?
“ Yet go—on peril’s brink we meet ;—
“ Those frightful rocks—that treacherous sea—
“ No, never come again—though sweet,
“ Though Heaven, it may be death to thee.
“ Farewell—and blessings on thy way,
“ Where’er thou goest, beloved stranger !
“ Better to sit and watch that ray,
“ And think thee safe, though far away,
“ Than have thee near me, and in danger !”

“ Danger !—Oh, tempt me not to boast—”
The youth exclaim’d—“ thou little know’st
“ What he can brave, who, born and nurst
“ In Danger’s paths, has dared her worst !
“ Upon whose ear the signal-word
“ Of strife and death is hourly breaking ;
“ Who sleeps with head upon the sword
“ His fever’d hand must grasp in waking !
“ Danger !—”
“ Say on—thou fear’st not then,
“ And we may meet—oft meet again ? ”
“ Oh ! look not so,—beneath the skies
“ I now fear nothing but those eyes.
“ If aught on earth could charm or force
“ My spirit from its destined course,—
“ If aught could make this soul forget
“ The bond to which its seal is set,
“ ’Twould be those eyes ;—they, only they,
“ Could melt that sacred seal away !
“ But no—’tis fix’d—my awful doom
“ Is fixed—on this side of the tomb
“ We meet no more—why, why did Heaven
“ Mingle two souls that earth has riven,

“ Has rent asunder wide as ours ?

“ Oh, Arab maid ! as soon the Powers

“ Of Light and Darkness may combine,

“ As I be link'd with thee or thine !

“ Thy Father———”

“ Holy ALLA save

“ His gray head from that lightning glance !

“ Thou know'st him not—he loves the brave ;

“ Nor lives there under Heaven's expanse

“ One who would prize, would worship thee,

“ And thy bold spirit, more than he.

“ Oft when, in childhood, I have play'd

“ With the bright falchion by his side,

“ I've heard him swear his lisping maid

“ In time should be a warrior's bride.

“ And still, whene'er, at Haram hours,

“ I take him cool sherbets and flowers,

“ He tells me, when in playful mood,

“ A hero shall my bridegroom be,

“ Since maids are best in battle woo'd,

“ And won with shouts of victory !

“ Nay, turn not from me—thou alone

“ Art form'd to make both hearts thy own.

“ Go—join his sacred ranks—thou know’st

“ Th’ unholy strife these Persians wage :—

“ Good Heaven, that frown!—even now thou glow’st

“ With more than mortal warrior’s rage.

“ Haste to the camp by morning’s light,

“ And, when that sword is raised in fight,

“ Oh still remember Love and I

“ Beneath its shadow trembling lie!

“ One victory o’er those Slaves of Fire,

“ Those impious Ghebers, whom my sire

“ Abhors——”

“ Hold, hold—thy words are death——”

The stranger cried, as wild he flung
His mantle back, and show’d beneath

The Gheber belt that round him clung.—*

“ Here, maiden, look—weep—blush to see

“ All that thy sire abhors in me!

“ Yes—I am of that impious race,

“ Those Slaves of Fire who, morn and even,

* “ They (the Ghebers) lay so much stress on their cushee, or girdle, as not to dare to be an instant without it.”—GROSE’S Voyage.—“ Le jeune homme nia d’abord la chose; mais, ayant été dépouillé de sa robe, et la large ceinture qu’il portait comme Ghebr,” etc. etc.—D’HERBELOT, art. Agduani.

“ Hail their Creator’s dwelling-place
“ Among the living lights of heaven ! *
“ Yes—I am of that outcast few,
“ To IRAN and to vengeance true,
“ Who curse the hour your Arabs came
“ To desolate our shrines of flame,
“ And swear, before God’s burning eye,
“ To break our country’s chains, or die !
“ Thy bigot sire—nay, tremble not—
“ He, who gave birth to those dear eyes,
“ With me is sacred as the spot
“ From which our fires of worship rise !
“ But know—’twas he I sought that night,
“ When, from my watch-boat on the sea,
“ I caught this turret’s glimmering light,
“ And up the rude rocks desperately
“ Rush’d to my prey—thou know’st the rest—
“ I climb’d the gory vulture’s nest,
“ And found a trembling dove within ;—
“ Thine, thine the victory—thine the sin—
“ If Love hath made one thought his own,
“ That Vengeance claims first—last—alone !

* They suppose the Throne of the Almighty is seated in the sun, and hence their worship of that luminary.—HANWAY.

- “ Oh ! had we never, never met,
“ Or could this heart even now forget
“ How link’d, how bless’d we might have been,
“ Had Fate not frown’d so dark between !
“ Hadst thou been born a Persian maid,
“ In neighbouring valleys had we dwelt,
“ Through the same fields in childhood play’d,
“ At the same kindling altar knelt,—
“ Then, then, while all those nameless ties,
“ In which the charm of Country lies,
“ Had round our hearts been hourly spun,
“ Till IRAN’S cause and thine were one ;—
“ While in thy lute’s awakening sigh
“ I heard the voice of days gone by,
“ And saw in every smile of thine
“ Returning hours of glory shine !—
“ While the wrong’d Spirit of our Land “ Lived, look’d, and spoke her wrongs through thee,—
“ God ! who could then this sword withstand ?
“ Its very flash were victory !
“ But now—estranged, divorced for ever,
“ Far as the grasp of Fate can sever ;

“ Our only ties what Love has wove,—
“ Faith, friends, and country, sunder’d wide;—
“ And then, then only, true to love,
“ When false to all that’s dear beside !
“ Thy father IRAN’S deadliest foe—
“ Thyself, perhaps, even now—but no—
“ Hate never look’d so lovely yet!
“ No—sacred to thy soul will be
“ The land of him who could forget
“ All but that bleeding land for thee!
“ When other eyes shall see, unmoved,
“ Her widows mourn, her warriors fall,
“ Thou’lt think how well one Gheber loved,
“ And for his sake thou’lt weep for all!
“ But look——”

With sudden start he turn’d
And pointed to the distant wave,
Where lights, like charnel meteors, burn’d
Bluely, as o’er some seaman’s grave ;
And fiery darts, at intervals,*
Flew up all sparkling from the main,

* “ The Mameluks that were in the other boat, when it was dark used to shoot up a sort of fiery arrows into the air, which in some measure resembled lightning or falling stars.”
—BAUMGARTEN.

As if each star that nightly falls,
Were shooting back to Heaven again.

“ My signal-lights !—I must away—
“ Both, both are ruin’d, if I stay.
“ Farewell—sweet life ! thou cling’st in vain—
“ Now—Vengeance !—I am thine again.”

Fiercely he broke away, nor stopp’d,
Nor look’d—but from the lattice dropp’d
Down ’mid the pointed crags beneath,
As if he fled from love to death.

While pale and mute young HINDA stood,
Nor moved, till in the silent flood

A momentary plunge below
Startled her from her trance of woe ;—
Shrieking she to the lattice flew,

“ I come—I come—if in that tide
“ Thou sleep’st to-night—I’ll sleep there too,
“ In death’s cold wedlock by thy side.
“ Oh ! I would ask no happier bed
“ Than the chill wave my love lies under ;—
“ Sweeter to rest together dead,
“ Far sweeter, than to live asunder !”

But no—their hour is not yet come—

Again she sees his pinnacle fly,

Wafting him fleetly to his home,

Where'er that ill-starr'd home may lie ;

And calm and smooth it seem'd to win

Its moonlight way before the wind,

As if it bore all peace within,

Nor left one breaking heart behind!

THE Princess, whose heart was sad enough already, could have wished that FERAMORZ had chosen a less melancholy story ; as it is only to the happy that tears are a luxury. Her ladies, however, were by no means sorry that love was once more the Poet's theme ; for, when he spoke of love, they said, his voice was as sweet as if he had chewed the leaves of that enchanted tree, which grows over the tomb of the musicain, Tan-Sein.

Their road all the morning had lain through a very dreary country ;—through valleys, covered with a low bushy jungle, where, in more than one place, the awful signal of the bamboo-staff, with the white flag at its top, reminded the traveller that in that very spot the tiger had made some human creature his victim. It was therefore with much pleasure that they arrived at sunset in a safe and lovely glen, and encamped under one of those holy trees, whose smooth columns and spreading roofs seem to destine them for natural temples of religion. Beneath the shade, some pious hands had erected pillars ornamented with the most beautiful porcelain, which now supplied the use of mirrors to the young maidens, as they adjusted their hair in descending from the palan-keens. Here while, as usual, the Princess sat listening anxiously, with FADLADEEN in one of his loftiest moods of criticism by her side, the young Poet, leaning against a branch of the tree, thus continued his story :—

THE morn hath risen clear and calm,
 And o'er the Green Sea * palely shines,
 Revealing BAHREIN's † groves of palm,
 And lighting KISHMA's † amber vines.
 Fresh smell the shores of ARABY,
 While breezes from the Indian sea
 Blow round SELAMA's § sainted cape,
 And curl the shining flood beneath,—
 Whose waves are rich with many a grape,
 And cocoa-nut and flowery wreath,
 Which pious seamen, as they pass'd,
 Had tow'rd that holy headland cast—
 Oblations to the Genii there
 For gentle skies and breezes fair !

* The Persian Gulf.—“To dive for pearls in the Green Sea, or Persian Gulf.”—SIR W. JONES.

† Islands in the Gulf.

§ Or Selemeh, the genuine name of the headland at the entrance of the Gulf, commonly called Cape Musseldom. “The Indians, when they pass the promontory, throw cocoa-nuts, fruits, or flowers into the sea, to secure a propitious voyage.”
—MORIER.

The nightingale now bends her flight
From the high trees, where all the night

She sung so sweet, with none to listen;
And hides her from the morning star

Where thickets of pomegranate glisten
In the clear dawn,—bespangled o'er

With dew, whose night-drops would not stain
The best and brightest scimitar *

That ever youthful Sultan wore

On the first morning of his reign!

And see—the Sun himself!—on wings
Of glory up the East he springs.

Angel of Light! who, from the time
Those heavens began their march sublime,

Hath first of all the starry choir

Trod in his Maker's steps of fire!

Where are the days, thou wondrous sphere,

When IRAN, like a sun-flower, turn'd

To meet that eye where'er it burn'd?—

When, from the banks of BENDEMEER

* In speaking of the climate of Shiraz, FRANKLIN says,
“the dew is of such a pure nature, that, if the brightest scimitar should be exposed to it all night, it would not receive the least rust.”

To the nut-groves of SAMARCAND
Thy temples flamed o'er all the land?
Where are they? ask the shades of them

Who, on CADESSIA'S* bloody plains,
Saw fierce invaders pluck the gem
From IRAN'S broken diadem,

And bind her ancient faith in chains:—
Ask the poor exile, cast alone
On foreign shores, unloved, unknown,
Beyond the Caspian's Iron Gates,†

Or on the snowy Mossian mountains,
Far from his beauteous land of dates,

Her jasmine bowers and sunny fountains!
Yet happier so than if he trod
His own beloved but blighted sod,
Beneath a despot stranger's nod!—
Oh! he would rather houseless roam

Where Freedom' and his God may lead,
Than be the sleekest slave at home

That crouches to the conqueror's creed!

* The place where the Persians were finally defeated by the Arabs, and their ancient monarchy destroyed.

† Derbend.—“Les Turcs appellent cette ville Demir Capi, Porte de Fer; ce sont les Caspiæ Portæ des anciens.”— D'HERBELOT.

Is IRAN'S pride then gone for ever,
Quench'd with the flame in MITHRA'S caves?—

No—she has sons that never—never—

Will stoop to be the Moslem's slaves,

While Heaven has light or earth has graves.

Spirits of fire, that brood not long,

But flash resentment back for wrong ;

And hearts where, slow but deep, the seeds

Of vengeance ripen into deeds,

Till, in some treacherous hour of calm,

They burst, like ZEILAN'S giant palm, *

Whose buds fly open with a sound

That shakes the pigmy forests round !

Yes, EMIR ! he, who scaled that tower,

And, had he reach'd thy slumbering breast,

Had taught thee, in a Gheber's power

How safe even tyrant heads may rest—

* The Talpot or Talipot tree. “ This beautiful palm-tree, which grows in the heart of the forests, may be classed among the loftiest trees, and becomes still higher when on the point of bursting forth from its leafy summit. The sheath which then envelopes the flower is very large, and, when it bursts, makes an explosion like the report of a cannon.”—
THUNBERG.

Is one of many, brave as he,
Who loathe thy haughty race and thee ;
Who, though they know the strife is vain,—
Who, though they know the riven chain
Snaps but to enter in the heart
Of him who rends its links apart,
Yet dare the issue,—blest to be
Even for one bleeding moment free,
And die in pangs of liberty!

Thou know'st them well—'tis some moons since
Thy turban'd troops and blood-red flags,
Thou satrap of a bigot Prince!

Have swarm'd among these Green Sea crags ;
Yet here, even here, a sacred band,
Ay, in the portal of that land
Thou, Arab, darest to call thy own,
Their spears across thy path have thrown ;
Here—ere the winds half wing'd thee o'er—
Rebellion braved thee from the shore.

Rebellion ! foul, dishonouring word,

Whose wrongful blight so oft has stain'd
The holiest cause that tongue or sword
Of mortal ever lost or gain'd.

How many a spirit, born to bless,
Hath sunk beneath that withering name,
Whom but a day's, an hour's success
Had wafted to eternal fame!

As exhalations, when they burst
From the warm earth, if chill'd at first,
If check'd in soaring from the plain,
Darken to fogs and sink again ;—
But, if they once triumphant spread
Their wings above the mountain-head,
Become enthroned in upper air,
And turn to sun-bright glories there !

And who is he, that wields the might
Of Freedom on the Green Sea brink,
Before whose sabre's dazzling light
The eyes of YEMEN's warriors wink ?
Who comes embower'd in the spears
Of KERMAN's hardy mountaineers?—
Those mountaineers that truest, last,
Cling to their country's ancient rites,
As if that God, whose eyelids cast
Their closing gleam on IRAN's heights,

Among her snowy mountains threw
The last light of his worship too !

'Tis HAFED—name of fear, whose sound
Chills like the muttering of a charm ;—
Shout but that awful name around,
And palsy shakes the manliest arm.

'Tis HAFED, most accurst and dire
(So rank'd by Moslem hate and ire)
Of all the rebel Sons of Fire !
Of whose malign, tremendous power,
The Arabs, at their mid-watch hour,
Such tales of fearful wonder tell,
That each affrighted sentinel
Pulls down his cowl upon his eyes,
Lest HAFED in the midst should rise !
A man, they say, of monstrous birth,
A mingled race of flame and earth,
Sprung from those old, enchanted kings,*
Who in their fairy helms, of yore,

* Tahmuras, and other ancient Kings of Persia ; whose adventures in Fairy-Land among the Peris and Dives may be found in RICHARDSON'S curious Dissertation. The griffin Simoorgh, they say, took some feathers from her breast for Tahmuras, with which he adorned his helmet, and transmitted them afterwards to his descendants.

A feather from the mystic wings
Of the Simoorgh resistless wore ;
And gifted by the Fiends of Fire,
Who groan'd to see their shrines expire,
With charms that, all in vain withstood,
Would drown the Koran's light in blood !
Such were the tales that won belief,
And such the colouring Fancy gave
To a young, warm, and dauntless Chief,—
One who, no more than mortal brave,
Fought for the land his soul adored,
For happy homes, and altars free,—
His only talisman, the sword,
His only spell-word, Liberty !
One of that ancient hero line,
Along whose glorious current shine
Names, that have sanctified their blood ;
As LEBANON'S small mountain-flood
Is render'd holy by the ranks
Of sainted cedars on its banks ! *

* This rivulet, says DANDINI, is called the Holy River, from the "cedar-saints" among which it rises.

'Twas not for him to crouch the knee
Tamely to Moslem tyranny;—
'Twas not for him, whose soul was cast
In the bright mould of ages past,
Whose melancholy spirit, fed
With all the glories of the dead,
Though framed for IRAN's happiest years,
Was born among her chains and tears!—

'Twas not for him to swell the crowd
Of slavish heads that shrinking bowed
Before the Moslem, as he pass'd,
Like shrubs beneath the poison-blast—

No—far he fled—indignant fled

The pageant of his country's shame;
While every tear her children shed

Fell on his soul, like drops of flame;
And, as a lover hails the dawn

Of a first smile, so welcomed he
The sparkle of the first sword drawn

For vengeance and for liberty!

But vain was valour—vain the flower
Of KERMAN, in that deathful hour,
Against AL HASSAN's whelming power.—

In vain they met him, helm to helm,
Upon the threshold of that realm
He came in bigot pomp to sway,
And with their corpses block'd his way—
In vain—for every lance they raised,
Thousands around the conqueror blazed ;
For every arm that lined their shore,
Myriads of slaves were wafted o'er,—
A bloody, bold, and countless crowd,
Before whose swarm as fast they bow'd,
As dates beneath the locust-cloud !

There stood—but one short league away
From old HARMOZIA's sultry bay—
A rocky mountain, o'er the Sea
Of OMAN beetling awfully :
A last and solitary link

Of those stupendous chains that reach
From the broad Caspian's reedy brink

Down winding to the Green Sea beach.
Around its base the bare rocks stood,
Like naked giants, in the flood,
As if to guard the gulf across ;
While, on its peak, that braved the sky,

A ruin'd Temple tower'd, so high
That oft the sleeping albatross*
Struck the wild ruins with her wing,
And from her cloud-rock'd slumbering
Started—to find man's dwelling there
In her own silent fields of air!
Beneath, terrific caverns gave
Dark welcome to each stormy wave
That dash'd, like midnight revellers, in ;—
And such the strange, mysterious din
At times throughout those caverns roll'd,—
And such the fearful wonders told
Of restless sprites imprison'd there,
That bold were Moslem, who would dare,
At twilight hour, to steer his skiff
Beneath the Gheber's lonely cliff.

On the land side, those towers sublime,
That seem'd above the grasp of Time,
Were sever'd from the haunts of men
By a wide, deep, and wizard glen,
So fathomless, so full of gloom,
No eye could pierce the void between ;

* These birds sleep in the air. They are most common about the Cape of Good Hope.

It seem'd a place where Gholes might come
With their foul banquets from the tomb,
And in its caverns feed unseen.
Like distant thunder, from below,
The sound of many torrents came ;
Too deep for eye or ear to know
If 'twere the sea's imprison'd flow,
Or floods of ever-restless flame.
For each ravine, each rocky spire
Of that vast mountain stood on fire ;*
And, though for ever past the days
When God was worshipp'd in the blaze
That from its lofty altar shone,—
Though fled the Priests, the votaries gone,
Still did the mighty flame burn on
Through chance and change, through good and ill,
Like its own God's eternal will,
Deep, constant, bright, unquenchable !

Thither the vanquish'd HAFED led
His little army's last remains ;—

* The Ghebers generally built their temples over subterraneous fires.

“ Welcome, terrific glen !” he said,
“ Thy gloom, that Eblis’ self might dread,
“ Is Heaven to him who flies from chains !”
O’er a dark, narrow bridge-way, known
To him and to his Chiefs alone,
They cross’d the chasm and gain’d the towers ;—
“ This home,” he cried, “ at least is ours—
“ Here we may bleed, unmock’d by hymns
“ Of Moslem triumph o’er our head ;
“ Here we may fall, nor leave our limbs
“ To quiver to the Moslem’s tread.
“ Stretch’d on this rock, while vultures’ beaks
“ Are whetted on our yet warm cheeks,
“ Here,—happy that no tyrant’s eye
“ Gloats on our torments—we may die !”
’Twas night when to those towers they came,
And gloomily the fitful flame,
That from the ruin’d altar broke,
Glared on his features, as he spoke :—
“ ’Tis o’er—what men could do, we’ve done—
“ If IRAN will look tamely on,
“ And see her priests, her warriors driven
“ Before a sensual bigot’s nod,

“ A wretch, who takes his lusts to Heaven,
“ And makes a pander of his God!
“ If her proud sons, her high-born souls,
“ Men, in whose veins—oh, last disgrace!
“ The blood of ZAL and RUSTAM * rolls,—
“ If they will court this upstart race,
“ And turn from MITHRA’s ancient ray,
“ To kneel at shrines of yesterday!
“ If they will crouch to IRAN’s foes,
“ Why, let them—till the land’s despair
“ Cries out to Heaven, and bondage grows
“ Too vile for even the vile to bear!
“ Till shame at last, long hidden, burns
“ Their inmost core, and conscience turns
“ Each coward tear the slave lets fall
“ Back on his heart in drops of gall!
“ But here, at least, are arms unchain’d,
“ And souls that thralldom never stain’d;—
“ This spot, at least, no foot of slave
“ Or satrap ever yet profaned;
“ And, though but few—though fast the wave

* Ancient heroes of Persia. “ Among the Guebres there are some who boast their descent from Rustam.”—STEPHEN’S Persia.

“ Of life is ebbing from our veins,
“ Enough for vengeance still remains.
“ As panthers, after set of sun,
“ Rush from the roots of LEBANON
“ Across the dark sea-robber’s way, *
“ We’ll bound upon our startled prey;—
“ And when some hearts that proudest swell
“ Have felt our falchion’s last farewell—
“ When Hope’s expiring throb is o’er,
“ And even Despair can prompt no more,
“ This spot shall be the sacred grave
“ Of the last few who, vainly brave,
“ Die for the land they cannot save !”

His Chiefs stood round—each shining blade
Upon the broken altar laid—

And though so wild and desolate
Those courts, where once the Mighty sate ;
Nor longer on those mouldering towers
Was seen the feast of fruits and flowers,
With which of old the Magi fed
The wandering Spirits of their Dead ; †

* See RUSSEL’S account of the panthers attacking travellers in the night on the sea-shore about the roots of Lebanon.

† “ Among other ceremonies, the Magi used to place upon the tops of high towers various kinds of rich viands, upon

Though neither priest nor rites were there,
 Nor charmed leaf of pure pomegranate ;*
 Nor hymn, nor censer's fragrant air,
 Nor symbol of their worshipp'd planet ;†
 Yet the same God that heard their sires
 Heard them ; while on that altar's fires
 They swore the latest, holiest deed
 Of the few hearts, still left to bleed,
 Should be, in IRAN's injured name,
 To die upon that Mount of Flame—
 The last of all her patriot line,
 Before her last untrampled Shrine !

Brave, suffering souls ! they little knew
 How many a tear their injuries drew which it was supposed the Peris and the spirits of their departed heroes regaled themselves."—RICHARDSON.

* In the ceremonies of the Ghebers round their Fire, as described by LORD, "the Daroo," he says, "giveth them water to drink, and a pomegranate leaf to chew in the mouth, to cleanse them from inward uncleanness."

† "Early in the morning, they (the Parsees or Ghebers at Oulam) go in crowds to pay their devotions to the Sun, to whom upon all the altars there are spheres consecrated, made by magic, resembling the circles of the sun, and when the sun rises, these orbs seem to be inflamed, and to turn round with a great noise. They have every one a censer in their hands, and offer incense to the sun."—RABBI BENJAMIN.

From one meek maid, one gentle foe,
Whom Love first touch'd with others' woe—
Whose life, as free from thought as sin,
Slept like a lake, till Love threw in
His talisman, and woke the tide,
And spread its trembling circles wide.
Once, EMIR! thy unheeding child,
'Mid all this havoc, bloom'd and smiled,—
Tranquil as on some battle-plain

The Persian lily shines and towers,
Before the combat's reddening stain

Hath fallen upon her golden flowers.
Light-hearted maid, unawed, unmoved,
While Heaven but spared the sire she loved,
Once at thy evening tales of blood
Unlistening and aloof she stood—
And oft, when thou hast paced along

Thy Haram halls with furious heat,
Hast thou not cursed her cheerful song,

That came across thee calm and sweet,
Like lutes of angels, touch'd so near
Hell's confines, that the damn'd can hear!
Far other feelings Love hath brought—

Her soul all flame, her brow all sadness,

She now has but the one dear thought,
And thinks that o'er, almost to madness !
Oft doth her sinking heart recal
His words—" for my sake weep for all ;"
And bitterly, as day on day
Of rebel carnage fast succeeds,
She weeps a lover snatch'd away
In every Gheber wretch that bleeds.
There's not a sabre meets her eye,
But with his life-blood seems to swim ;
There's not an arrow wings the sky,
But fancy turns its point to him.
No more she brings with footstep light
AL HASSAN's falchion for the fight ;
And, had he look'd with clearer sight—
Had not the mists, that ever rise
From a foul spirit, dimm'd his eyes,—
He would have mark'd her shuddering frame,
When from the field of blood he came,
The faltering speech—the look estranged—
Voice, step, and life, and beauty changed—
He would have mark'd all this, and known
Such change is wrought by Love alone !

Ah ! not the Love, that should have bless'd
So young, so innocent a breast ;
Not the pure, open, prosperous Love,
That, pledged on earth and seal'd above,
Grows in the world's approving eyes;

In friendship's smile and home's caress,
Collecting all the heart's sweet ties
Into one knot of happiness !

No, HINDA, no—thy fatal flame
Is nursed in silence, sorrow, shame.—

A passion, without hope or pleasure,
In thy soul's darkness buried deep,

It lies, like some ill-gotten treasure,—
Some idol, without shrine or name,
O'er which its pale-eyed votaries keep
Unholy watch, while others sleep !

Seven nights have darken'd OMAN's Sea,

Since last, beneath the moonlight ray,
She saw his light oar rapidly

Hurry her Gheber's bark away,—
And still she goes, at midnight hour,
To weep alone in that high bower,
And watch, and look along the deep
For him whose smiles first made her weep,—

But watching, weeping, all was vain,
 She never saw his bark again.
 The owlet's solitary cry,
 The night-hawk, flitting darkly by,
 And oft the hateful carrion-bird,
 Heavily flapping his clogg'd wing,
 Which reek'd with that day's banqueting—
 Was all she saw, was all she heard.

'Tis the eighth morn—AL HASSAN's brow
 Is brighten'd with unusual joy—
 What mighty mischief glads him now,
 Who never smiles but to destroy?
 The sparkle upon HERKEND's Sea,
 When tost at midnight furiously,*
 Tells not of wreck and ruin nigh,
 More surely than that smiling eye!
 “Up, daughter, up—the Kerna's † breath
 “Has blown a blast would waken death,

* “It is observed, with respect to the Sea of Herkend, that when it is tossed by tempestuous winds it sparkles like fire.”
 —Travels of two Mohammedans.

† A kind of trumpet;—it “was that used by Tamerlane, the sound of which is described as uncommonly dreadful, and so loud as to be heard at the distance of several miles.”—
 RICHARDSON.

“ And yet thou sleep’st—up, child, and see
“ This blessed day for Heaven and me,
“ A day more rich in Pagan blood
“ Than ever flash’d o’er OMAN’S flood.
“ Before another dawn shall shine,
“ His head—heart—limbs—will all be mine ;
“ This very night his blood shall steep
“ These hands all over ere I sleep !”—
“ His blood ! ” she faintly scream’d—her mind
Still singling one from all mankind—
“ Yes—spite of his ravines and towers,
“ HAFED, my child, this night is ours.
“ Thanks to all-conquering treachery,
“ Without whose aid the links accurst,
“ That bind these impious slaves, would be “ Too strong for ALLA’S self to burst !
“ That rebel fiend, whose blade has spread
“ My path with piles of Moslem dead,
“ Whose baffling spells had almost driven
“ Back from their course the Swords of Heaven,
“ This night, with all his band, shall know
“ How deep an Arab’s steel can go,
“ When God and Vengeance speed the blow.

“ And—Prophet!—by that holy wreath
“ Thou worest on OHOD’S field of death, *
“ I swear, for every sob that parts
“ In anguish from these heathen hearts,
“ A gem from PERSIA’S plunder’d mines
“ Shall glitter on thy Shrine of Shrines.
“ But ha!—she sinks—that look so wild—
“ Those livid lips—my child, my child,
“ This life of blood befits not thee,
“ And thou must back to ARABY.
“ Ne’er had I risk’d thy timid sex
“ In scenes that man himself might dread,
“ Had I not hoped our every tread
“ Would be on prostrate Persian necks—
“ Curst race, they offer swords instead!
“ But cheer thee, maid,—the wind that now
“ Is blowing o’er thy feverish brow,
“ To-day shall waft thee from the shore;
“ And, ere a drop of this night’s gore
“ Have time to chill in yonder towers,
“ Thou’lt see thy own sweet Arab bowers!”

* “ Mohammed had two helmets, an interior and exterior one; the latter of which, called Al Mawashah, the fillet, wreath, or wreathed garland, he wore at the battle of Ohod.”
—Universal History.

His bloody boast was all too true—
There lurk'd one wretch among the few
Whom HAFED's eagle eye could count
Around him on that Fiery Mount,—
One miscreant, who for gold betray'd
The path-way through the valley's shade
To those high towers where Freedom stood
In her last hold of flame and blood.
Left on the field last dreadful night,
When, sallying from their Sacred Height,
The Ghebers fought Hope's farewell fight,
He lay—but died not with the brave;
That sun, which should have gilt his grave,
Saw him a traitor and a slave ;—
And, while the few, who thence return'd
To their high rocky fortress, mourn'd
For him among the matchless dead
They left behind on Glory's bed,
He lived, and in the face of morn,
Laugh'd them and Faith and Heaven to scorn !

Oh for a tongue to curse the slave,
Whose treason, like a deadly blight,

Comes o'er the councils of the brave,
And blasts them in their hour of might!
May Life's unblessed cup for him
Be drugg'd with treacheries to the brim,—
With hopes that but allure to fly,—
With joys that vanish while he sips,
Like Dead-Sea fruits, that tempt the eye,
But turn to ashes on the lips!
His country's curse, his children's shame,
Outcast of virtue, peace, and fame,
May he, at last, with lips of flame
On the parch'd desert thirsting die,—
While lakes that shone in mockery nigh
Are fading off, untouch'd, untasted,
Like the once-glorious hopes he blasted!
And, when from earth his spirit flies,
Just Prophet, let the damn'd-one dwell
Full in the sight of Paradise,
Beholding Heaven, and feeling Hell!

LALLA ROOKH had had a dream the night before, which, in spite of the impending fate of poor HAFED, made her heart more than usually cheerful during the morning, and gave her cheeks all the freshened animation of a flower that the Bidmusk has just passed over. She fancied that she was sailing on that Eastern Ocean, where the sea-gipseys, who live for ever on the water, enjoy a perpetual summer in wandering from isle to isle, when she saw a small gilded bark approaching her. It was like one of those boats which the Maldivian islanders annually send adrift, at the mercy of winds and waves, loaded with perfumes, flowers, and odoriferous wood, as an offering to the Spirit whom they call King of the Sea. At first, this little bark appeared to be empty, but, on coming nearer——

She had proceeded thus far in relating the dream to her ladies, when FERAMORZ appeared at the door of the pavilion. In his presence, of course, every thing else was forgotten, and the continuance of the story was instantly requested by all. Fresh wood of aloes was set to burn in the cassolets;—the violet sherbets were hastily handed round, and, after a short prelude on his lute, in the pathetic measure of Nava, which is always used to express the lamentations of absent lovers, the poet thus continued :—

THE day is lowering—stilly black
Sleeps the grim wave, while Heaven's rack,
Dispersed and wild, 'twixt earth and sky
Hangs like a shatter'd canopy !
There's not a cloud in that blue plain

But tells of storm to come or past ;—
Here, flying loosely as the mane

Of a young war-horse in the blast ;
There, roll'd in masses dark and swelling,
As proud to be the thunder's dwelling !
While some, already burst and riven,
Seem melting down the verge of Heaven ;
As though the infant storm had rent

The mighty womb that gave him birth,
And, having swept the firmament,
Was now in fierce career for earth.

On earth 'twas yet all calm around,
A pulseless silence, dread, profound,
More awful than the tempest's sound.

The diver steer'd for ORMUS' bowers,
And moor'd his skiff till calmer hours ;
The sea-birds, with portentous screech,
Flew fast to land ;—upon the beach
The pilot oft had paused, with glance
Turn'd upward to that wild expanse ;
And all was boding, drear and dark
As her own soul, when HINDA'S bark
Went slowly from the Persian shore—
No music timed her parting oar,*
Nor friends upon the lessening strand
Linger'd, to wave the unseen hand,
Or speak the farewell, heard no more ;—
But lone, unheeded, from the bay
The vessel takes its mournful way,
Like some ill-destined bark that steers
In silence through the Gate of Tears. †

* “ The Easterns used to set out on their longer voyages with music.”—HARMER.

† “ The Gate of Tears, the straits or passage into the Red Sea, commonly called Babelmandel. It received this name from the old Arabians, on account of the danger of the navigation, and the number of shipwrecks by which it was distinguished ; which induced them to consider as dead, and to wear mourning for, all who had the boldness to hazard the passage through it into the Ethiopic ocean.”—RICHARDSON.

And where was stern AL HASSAN then ?
Could not that saintly scourge of men
From blood-shed and devotion spare
One minute for a farewell there ?
No—close within, in changeful fits
Of cursing and of prayer, he sits
In savage loneliness to brood
Upon the coming night of blood,

With that keen, second-scent of death,
By which the vulture snuffs his food

In the still warm and living breath !*
While o'er the wave his weeping daughter
Is wafted from these scenes of slaughter,—
As a young bird of BABYLON, †
Let loose to tell of victory won,
Flies home, with wing, ah ! not unstain'd
By the red hands that held her chain'd.

And does the long-left home she seeks
Light up no gladness on her cheeks ?

* “ I have been told that whensoever an animal falls down dead, one or more vultures, unseen before, instantly appear.”
—PENNANT.

† “ They fasten some writing to the wings of a Bagdat, or Babylonian pigeon.”—Travels of certain Englishmen.

The flowers she nursed—the well-known groves,
Where oft in dreams her spirit roves—
Once more to see her dear gazelles
Come bounding with their silver bells ;
Her birds' new plumage to behold,
And the gay, gleaming fishes count,
She left, all filletted with gold,
Shooting around their jasper fount.—*
Her little garden mosque to see,
And once again, at evening hour,
To tell her ruby rosary
In her own sweet acacia bower.—
Can these delights, that wait her now,
Call up no sunshine on her brow?
No—silent, from her train apart,—
As if even now she felt at heart
The chill of her approaching doom,—
She sits, all lovely in her gloom,
As a pale Angel of the Grave ;
And o'er the wide, tempestuous wave,

* “ The Empress of Jehan-Guire used to divert herself with feeding tame fish in her canals, some of which were many years afterwards known by fillets of gold, which she caused to be put round them.”—HARRIS.

Looks, with a shudder, to those towers,
Where, in a few short awful hours,
Blood, blood, in steaming tides shall run,
Foul incense for to-morrow's sun !

“ Where art thou, glorious stranger ! thou,

“ So loved, so lost, where art thou now ?

“ Foe—Gheber—infidel—whate'er

“ Th' unhallow'd name thou'rt doom'd to bear,

“ Still glorious—still to this fond heart

“ Dear as its blood, whate'er thou art !

“ Yes—ALLA, dreadful ALLA ! yes—

“ If there be wrong, be crime in this,

“ Let the black waves, that round us roll,

“ Whelm me this instant, ere my soul,

“ Forgetting faith,—home,—father,—all—

“ Before its earthly idol fall,

“ Nor worship even Thyself above him.—

“ For oh ! so wildly do I love him,

“ Thy Paradise itself were dim

“ And joyless, if not shared with him !”

Her hands were clasp'd—her eyes upturn'd,
Dropping their tears like moonlight rain ;

And, though her lip, fond raver ! burn'd
With words of passion, bold, profane,
Yet was there light around her brow,
A holiness in those dark eyes,
Which show'd—though wandering earthward
now,—

Her spirit's home was in the skies.
Yes—for a spirit, pure as hers,
Is always pure, even while it errs ;
As sunshine, broken in the rill,
Though turn'd astray, is sunshine still !

So wholly had her mind forgot
All thoughts but one, she heeded not
The rising storm—the wave that cast
A moment's midnight, as it pass'd—
Nor heard the frequent shout, the tread
Of gathering tumult o'er her head—
Clash'd swords, and tongues that seem'd to vie
With the rude riot of the sky.—

But hark !—that war-whoop on the deck—

That crash, as if each engine there,
Mast, sails, and all, were gone to wreck,
'Mid yells and stampings of despair !

Merciful Heaven ! what can it be ?
'Tis not the storm, though fearfully
The ship has shuddered as she rode O'er mountain waves—"Forgive me, God !
"Forgive me"—shriek'd the maid, and knelt,
Trembling all over,—for she felt
As if her judgment-hour was near ;
While crouching round, half dead with fear,
Her hand-maids clung, nor breathed, nor stirr'd—
When, hark !—a second crash—a third—
And now, as if a bolt of thunder
Had riven the labouring planks asunder,
The deck falls in—what horrors then !
Blood, waves, and tackle, swords and men
Come mix'd together through the chasm ;—
Some wretches in their dying spasm
Still fighting on—and some that call
"For God and IRAN !" as they fall !

Whose was the hand that turn'd away
The perils of th' infuriate fray,
And snatch'd her breathless from beneath
This wilderment of wreck and death ?

She knew not—for a faintness came
Chill o'er her, and her sinking frame
Amid the ruins of that hour
Lay, like a pale and scorched flower,
Beneath the red volcano's shower!
But oh! the sights and sounds of dread
That shock'd her, ere her senses fled!
The yawning deck—the crowd that strove
Upon the tottering planks above—
The sail, whose fragments, shivering o'er
The strugglers' heads, all dash'd with gore,
Flutter'd like bloody flags—the clash
Of sabres, and the lightning's flash
Upon their blades, high toss'd about
Like meteor brands*—as if throughout

The elements one fury ran,
One general rage, that left a doubt

Which was the fiercer, Heaven or Man!

Once too—but no—it could not be—

'Twas fancy all—yet once she thought,
While yet her fading eyes could see,
High on the ruin'd deck she caught

* The meteors that PLINY calls “faces.”

A glimpse of that unearthly form,
That glory of her soul,—even then,
Amid the whirl of wreck and storm,
Shining above his fellow-men,
As, on some black and troublous night,
The Star of EGYPT,* whose proud light
Never hath beam'd on those who rest
In the White Islands of the West,†
Burns through the storm with looks of flame
That put Heaven's cloudier eyes to shame!
But no—'twas but the minute's dream—
A fantasy—and ere the scream
Had half-way pass'd her pallid lips,
A death-like swoon, a chill eclipse
Of soul and sense its darkness spread
Around her, and she sunk, as dead!

How calm, how beautiful comes on
The stilly hour, when storms are gone;
When warring winds have died away,
And clouds, beneath the glancing ray,

* “The brilliant Canopus, unseen in European climates.”
—BROWN.

† See WILFORD's learned Essays on the Sacred Isles in the West.

Melt off, and leave the land and sea
Sleeping in bright tranquillity,—
Fresh as if Day again were born,
Again upon the lap of Morn !
When the light blossoms, rudely torn
And scatter'd at the whirlwind's will,
Hang floating in the pure air still,
Filling it all with precious balm,
In gratitude for this sweet calm ;—
And every drop the thunder-showers
Have left upon the grass and flowers
Sparkles, as 'twere that lightning-gem *
Whose liquid flame is born of them !

When, 'stead of one unchanging breeze,
There blow a thousand gentle airs,
And each a different perfume bears,—
As if the loveliest plants and trees
Had vassal breezes of their own
To watch and wait on them alone,
And waft no other breath than theirs !

* A precious stone of the Indies, called by the ancients Ceraunium, because it was supposed to be found in places where thunder had fallen. TERTULLIAN says it has a glittering appearance, as if there had been fire in it; and the author of the Dissertation in HARRIS's Voyages supposes it to be the opal.

When the blue waters rise and fall,
In sleepy sunshine mantling all;
And even that swell the tempest leaves
Is like the full and silent heaves
Of lovers' hearts, when newly blest,
Too newly to be quite at rest!

Such was the golden hour that broke
Upon the world when HINDA woke
From her long trance, and heard around
No motion but the water's sound
Rippling against the vessel's side,
As slow it mounted o'er the tide.—
But where is she?—her eyes are dark,
Are wilder'd still—is this the bark,
The same, that from HARMOZIA'S bay
Bore her at morn—whose bloody way
The sea-dog track'd?—no—strange and new
Is all that meets her wondering view.
Upon a galliot's deck she lies,
Beneath no rich pavilion's shade,
No plumes to fan her sleeping eyes,
Nor jasmine on her pillow laid.
But the rude litter, roughly spread
With war-cloaks, is her homely bed,

And shawl and sash, on javelins hung,
For awning o'er her head are flung.
Shuddering she look'd around—there lay

A group of warriors in the sun
Resting their limbs, as for that day

Their ministry of death were done.
Some gazing on the drowsy sea,
Lost in unconscious reverie;
And some, who seem'd but ill to brook
That sluggish calm, with many a look
To the slack sail impatient cast,
As loose it flagg'd around the mast.

Blest ALLA! who shall save her now?

There's not in all that warrior-band
One Arab sword, one turban'd brow
From her own Faithful Moslem land.

Their garb—the leathern belt * that wraps

Each yellow vest †—that rebel hue—
The Tartar fleece upon their caps—§

Yes—yes—her fears are all too true,

* D'HERBELOT, Art. Agduani.

† “The Guebres are known by a dark yellow colour, which the men affect in their clothes.”—THEVENOT.

§ “The Kolah, or cap, worn by the Persians, is made of the skin of the sheep of Tartary.”—WARING.

And Heaven hath, in this dreadful hour,
Abandon'd her to HAFED's power;—
HAFED, the Gheber!—at the thought

Her very heart's blood chills within;
He, whom her soul was hourly taught

To loathe, as some foul fiend of sin,
Some minister, whom Hell had sent
To spread its blast, where'er he went,
And fling, as o'er our earth he trod,
His shadow betwixt man and God!

And she is now his captive,—thrown
In his fierce hands, alive, alone;

His the infuriate band she sees,
All infidels—all enemies!

What was the daring hope that then
Cross'd her like lightning, as again,
With boldness that despair had lent,

She darted through that armed crowd
A look so searching, so intent,

That even the sternest warrior bow'd
Abash'd, when he her glances caught,
As if he guess'd whose form they sought.

But no—she sees him not—'tis gone,—
The vision, that before her shone

Through all the maze of blood and storm,
Is fled—'twas but a phantom form—
One of those passing, rainbow dreams,
Half light, half shade, which Fancy's beams
Paint on the fleeting mists that roll
In trance or slumber round the soul!

But now the bark, with livelier bound,
Scales the blue wave—the crew's in motion—
The oars are out, and with light sound
Break the bright mirror of the ocean,
Scattering its brilliant fragments round.
And now she sees—with horror sees
Their course is tow'rd that mountain hold,—
Those towers, that make her life-blood freeze,
Where MECCA's godless enemies
Lie, like beleagured scorpions, roll'd
In their last deadly, venomous fold!
Amid the illumined land and flood,
Sunless that mighty mountain stood;
Save where, above its awful head,
There shone aflaming cloud, blood-red,
As 'twere the flag of destiny
Hung out to mark where death would be!

Had her bewilder'd mind the power
Of thought in this terrific hour,
She well might marvel where or how
Man's foot could scale that mountain's brow ;
Since ne'er had Arab heard or known
Of path but through the glen alone.—
But every thought was lost in fear,
When, as their bounding bark drew near
The craggy base, she felt the waves
Hurry them tow'rd those dismal caves
That from the Deep in windings pass
Beneath that Mount's volcanic mass—
And loud a voice on deck commands
To lower the mast and light the brands !—
Instantly o'er the dashing tide
Within a cavern's mouth they glide,
Gloomy as that eternal Porch,
Through which departed spirits go ;—
Not even the flare of brand and torch
Its flickering light could further throw
Than the thick flood that boil'd below,
Silent they floated—as if each
Sat breathless, and too awed for speech

In that dark chasm, where even sound
Seem'd dark,—so sullenly around
The goblin echoes of the cave
Mutter'd it o'er the long black wave,
As 'twere some secret of the grave!

But soft—they pause—the current turns

Beneath them from its onward track ;—
Some mighty, unseen barrier spurns

The vexed tide, all foaming, back,
And scarce the oar's redoubled force
Can stem the eddy's whirling course ;
When, hark !—some desperate foot has sprung
Among the rocks—the chain is flung—
The oars are up—the grapple clings,
And the toss'd bark in moorings swings.

Just then, a day-beam through the shade
Broke tremulous—but, ere the maid
Can see from whence the brightness steals,
Upon her brow she shuddering feels
A viewless hand, that promptly ties
A bandage round her burning eyes ;
While the rude litter where she lies,

Uplifted by the warrior throng,
O'er the steep rocks is borne along.

Blest power of sunshine! genial Day,
What balm, what life is in thy ray!
To feel thee is such real bliss,
That had the world no joy but this,
To sit in sunshine calm and sweet,—
It were a world too exquisite
For man to leave it for the gloom,
The deep, cold shadow of the tomb!
Even HINDA, though she saw not where
Or whither wound the perilous road,
Yet knew by that awakening air,
Which suddenly around her glow'd,
That they had risen from darkness then,
And breathed the sunny world again!

But soon this balmy freshness fled—
For now the steepy labyrinth led
Through damp and gloom—'mid crash of boughs;
And fall of loosen'd crags that rouse
The leopard from his hungry sleep,
Who, starting, thinks each crag a prey,

And long is heard from steep to steep,
Chasing them down their thundering way!
The jackal's cry—the distant moan
Of the hyæna, fierce and lone;—
And that eternal, saddening sound
Of torrents in the glen beneath,
As 'twere the ever-dark Profound
That rolls beneath the Bridge of Death!
All, all is fearful—even to see,
To gaze on those terrific things
She now but blindly hears, would be
Relief to her imaginings!
Since never yet was shape so dread,
But Fancy, thus in darkness thrown,
And by such sounds of horror fed,
Could frame more dreadful of her own,
But does she dream? has Fear again
Perplex'd the workings of her brain,
Or did a voice, all music, then
Come from the gloom, low whispering near—
“ Tremble not, love, thy Gheber's here!”
She does not dream—all sense, all ear,
She drinks the words, “ Thy Gheber's here.”

'Twas his own voice—she could not err—
Throughout the breathing world's extent
There was but one such voice for her,
So kind, so soft, so eloquent!
Oh! sooner shall the rose of May Mistake her own sweet nightingale,
And to some meaner minstrel's lay
Open her bosom's glowing veil,*
Than Love shall ever doubt a tone,
A breath of the beloved one!
Though blest, 'mid all her ills, to think
She has that one beloved near,
Whose smile, though met on ruin's brink,
Hath power to make even ruin dear,—
Yet soon this gleam of rapture, cross'd
By fears for him, is chill'd and lost.
How shall the ruthless HAFED brook
That one of Gheber blood should look,
With aught but curses in his eye,
On her—a maid of ARABY—
A Moslem maid—the child of him,
Whose bloody banner's dire success

* A frequent image among the oriental poets. "The nightingales warbled their enchanting notes, and rent the thin veils of the rose-bud and the rose."—JAMI.

Hath left their altars cold and dim,
And their fair land a wilderness!
And, worse than all, that night of blood
Which comes so fast—oh! who shall stay
The sword, that once hath tasted food
Of Persian hearts, or turn its way?
What arm shall then the victim cover,
Or from her father shield her lover?

“ Save him, my God !” she inly cries—
“ Save him this night—and if thine eyes
“ Have ever welcomed with delight
“ The sinner’s tears, the sacrifice
“ Of sinners’ hearts—guard him this night,
“ And here, before thy throne, I swear
“ From my heart’s inmost core to tear
“ Love, hope, remembrance, though they be “ Link’d with each quivering life-string there,
“ And give it bleeding all to Thee!
“ Let him but live, the burning tear,
“ The sighs, so sinful yet so dear,
“ Which have been all too much his own,
“ Shall from this hour be Heaven’s alone.

“ Youth pass’d in penitence, and age
“ In long and painful pilgrimage,
“ Shall leave no traces of the flame
“ That wastes me now—nor shall his name
“ E’er bless my lips, but when I pray
“ For his dear spirit, that away
“ Casting from its angelic ray
“ Th’ eclipse of earth, he too may shine
“ Redeem’d, all glorious and all Thine!
“ Think—think what victory to win
“ One radiant soul like his from sin;—
“ One wandering star of virtue back
“ To its own native, heaven-ward track!
“ Let him but live, and both are Thine,
“ Together Thine—for, blest or crost,
“ Living or dead, his doom is mine,
“ And if he perish, both are lost!”

THE next evening LALLA ROOKH was entreated by her Ladies to continue the relation of her wonderful dream; but the fearful interest that hung round the fate of HINDA and her lover had completely removed every trace of it from her mind;—much to the disappointment of a fair seer or two in her train, who prided themselves on their skill in interpreting visions, and who had already remarked, as an unlucky omen, that the Princess, on the very morning after the dream, had worn a silk dyed with the blossoms of the sorrowful tree, Nilica.

FADLADEEN, whose wrath had more than once broken out during the recital of some parts of this most heterodox poem, seemed at length to have made up his mind to the infliction; and took his seat for the evening with all the patience of a martyr, while the Poet continued his profane and seditious story thus :

To tearless eyes and hearts at ease
The leafy shores and sun-bright seas,
That lay beneath that mountain's height,
Had been a fair, enchanting sight.
'Twas one of those ambrosial eyes
A day of storm so often leaves
At its calm setting—when the West
Opens her golden bowers of rest,
And a moist radiance from the skies
Shoots trembling down, as from the eyes
Of some meek penitent, whose last
Bright hours atone for dark ones past,
And whose sweet tears, o'er wrong forgiven,
Shine, as they fall, with light from Heaven!
'Twas stillness all—the winds that late
Had rush'd through KERMAN's almond groves,
And shaken from her bowers of date
That cooling feast the traveller loves, *

* “In parts of Kerman, whatever dates are shaken from the trees by the wind they do not touch, but leave them for those who have not any, or for travellers.”—EBN HAUHEL.

Now, lull'd to languor, scarcely curl
The Green Sea wave, whose waters gleam
Limpid, as if her mines of pearl
Were melted all to form the stream.
And her fair islets, small and bright,
With their green shores reflected there,
Look like those Peri isles of light,
That hang by spell-work in the air.

But vainly did those glories burst
On HINDA'S dazzled eyes, when first
The bandage from her brow was taken,
And pale and awed as those who waken
In their dark tombs—when, scowling near,
The Searchers of the Grave* appear,—
She shuddering turn'd to read her fate
In the fierce eyes that flash'd around;
And saw those towers all desolate,
That o'er her head terrific frown'd,
As if defying even the smile
Of that soft Heaven to gild their pile.

* The two terrible angels, Monkir and Nakir; who are called "the Searchers of the Grave" in the "Creed of the orthodox Mahometans" given by OCKLEY, vol. ii.

In vain, with mingled hope and fear,
She looks for him whose voice so dear
Had come, like music, to her ear—
Strange, mocking dream ! again 'tis fled.
And oh ! the shoots, the pangs of dread
That through her inmost bosom run,
When voices from without proclaim
“ HAFED, the Chief ”—and, one by one,
The warriors shout that fearful name !
He comes—the rock resounds his tread—
How shall she dare to lift her head,
Or meet those eyes, whose scorching glare
Not YEMEN'S boldest sons can bear ?
In whose red beam, the Moslem tells,
Such rank and deadly lustre dwells,
As in those hellish fires that light
The mandrake's charnel leaves at night ! *
How shall she bear that voice's tone,
At whose loud battle-cry alone
Whole squadrons oft in panic ran,
Scatter'd, like some vast caravan,

* “ The Arabians call the mandrake ‘ the Devil's candle,’
on account of its shining appearance in the night.”—RICH-ARDSON.

When, stretch'd at evening round the well,
They hear the thirsting tiger's yell!

Breathless she stands, with eyes cast down,
Shrinking beneath the fiery frown,
Which, fancy tells her, from that brow
Is flashing o'er her fiercely now!

And shuddering, as she hears the tread
Of his retiring warrior band.—

Never was pause so full of dread;
Till HAFED with a trembling hand

Took hers, and, leaning o'er her, said,
“HINDA!”—that word was all he spoke,
And 'twas enough—the shriek that broke

From her full bosom told the rest—
Panting with terror, joy, surprise,
The maid but lifts her wondering eyes,

To hide them on her Gheber's breast!
'Tis he, 'tis he—the man of blood,
The fellest of the Fire-fiend's brood,
HAFED, the demon of the fight,
Whose voice unnerves, whose glances blight,—
Is her own loved Gheber, mild
And glorious as when first he smiled

In her lone tower, and left such beams
Of his pure eye to light her dreams,
That she believed her bower had given
Rest to some wanderer from Heaven !

Moments there are, and this was one,
Snatch'd like a minute's gleam of sun
Amid the black Simoom's eclipse—

Or like those verdant spots that bloom
Around the crater's burning lips,

Sweetening the very edge of doom !
The past—the future—all that Fate
Can bring of dark or desperate
Around such hours, but makes them cast
Intenser radiance while they last !

Even he, this youth—though dimm'd and gone
Each star of Hope that cheer'd him on—
His glories lost—his cause betray'd—
IRAN, his dear-loved country, made
A land of carcasses and slaves,
One dreary waste of chains and graves !—
Himself but lingering, dead at heart,
To see the last, long-struggling breath

Of Liberty's great soul depart,
Then lay him down, and share her death—
Even he, so sunk in wretchedness,
With doom still darker gathering o'er him,
Yet in this moment's pure caress,
In the mild eyes that shone before him,
Beaming that blest assurance, worth
All other transports known on earth,
That he was loved—well, warmly loved—
Oh! in this precious hour he proved
How deep, how thorough-felt the glow
Of rapture, kindling out of woe;—
How exquisite one single drop
Of bliss, thus sparkling to the top
Of misery's cup—how keenly quaff'd,
Though death must follow on the draught!

She too, while gazing on those eyes
That sink into her soul so deep,
Forgets all fears, all miseries,
Or feels them like the wretch in sleep,
Whom Fancy cheats into a smile,
Who dreams of joy, and sobs the while!

The mighty ruins where they stood,
Upon the mount's high, rocky verge,
Lay open tow'rds the ocean flood,
Where lightly o'er th' illumined surge
Many a fair bark that, all the day,
Had lurk'd in sheltering creek or bay,
Now bounded on and gave their sails,
Yet dripping, to the evening gales ;
Like eagles, when the storm is done,
Spreading their wet wings in the sun.
The beauteous clouds, though daylight's Star
Had sunk behind the hills of LAR,
Were still with lingering glories bright,—
As if, to grace the gorgeous West,
The Spirit of departing Light
That eve had left his sunny vest
Behind him, ere he wing'd his flight.
Never was scene so form'd for love !
Beneath them, waves of crystal move
In silent swell—Heaven glows above,
And their pure hearts, to transport given,
Swell like the wave, and glow like Heaven.
But ah ! too soon that dream is past—
Again, again her fear returns ;—

Night, dreadful night, is gathering fast,
More faintly the horizon burns,
And every rosy tint that lay
On the smooth sea hath died away.

Hastily to the darkening skies
A glance she casts—then wildly cries,
“ At night, he said—and, look, ’tis near—
“ Fly, Fly—if yet thou lovest me, fly—
“ Soon will his murderous band be here,
“ And I shall see thee bleed and die.—
“ Hush!—heard’st thou not the tramp of men
“ Sounding from yonder fearful glen?—
“ Perhaps even now they climb the wood—
“ Fly, fly—though still the West is bright,
“ He’ll come—oh! yes—he wants thy blood—
“ I know him—he’ll not wait for night!”

In terrors even to agony
She clings around the wondering Chief;—
“ Alas, poor wilder’d maid! to me
“ Thou owest this raving trance of grief.
“ Lost as I am, nought ever grew
“ Beneath my shade but perish’d too—

- “ My doom is like the Dead Sea air,
“ And nothing lives that enters there !
“ Why were our barks together driven
“ Beneath this morning’s furious Heaven ?
“ Why, when I saw the prize that chance
“ Had thrown into my desperate arms,—
“ When, casting but a single glance
“ Upon thy pale and prostrate charms,
“ I vow’d (though watching viewless o’er
“ Thy safety through that hour’s alarms)
“ To meet the unmanning sight no more—
“ Why have I broke that heart-wrung vow ?
“ Why weakly, madly met thee now ?—
“ Start not—that noise is but the shock
“ Of torrents through yon valley hurl’d—
“ Dread nothing here—upon this rock
“ We stand above the jarring world,
“ Alike beyond its hope—its dread—
“ In gloomy safety, like the Dead !
“ Or, could even earth and hell unite
“ In league to storm this Sacred Height,
“ Fear nothing thou—myself, to-night,
“ And each o’erlooking star that dwells
“ Near God will be thy sentinels ;—

“ And, ere to-morrow’s dawn shall glow,

“ Back to thy sire——”

“ To-morrow !—no—”

The maiden scream’d—“ thou’lt never see

“ To-morrow’s sun—death, death will be

“ The night-cry through each reeking tower,

“ Unless we fly, ay, fly this hour !

“ Thou art betray’d—some wretch who knew

“ That dreadful glen’s mysterious clew—

“ Nay, doubt not—by yon stars, ’tis true—

“ Hath sold thee to my vengeful sire ;

“ This morning, with that smile so dire

“ He wears in joy, he told me all,

“ And stamp’d in triumph through our hall,

“ As though thy heart already beat

“ Its last life-throb beneath his feet ?

“ Good Heaven, how little dream’d I then

“ His victim was my own loved youth !—

“ Fly—send—let some one watch the glen—

“ By all my hopes of Heaven ’tis truth !”

Oh ! colder than the wind that freezes

Founts, that but now in sunshine play’d,

Is that congealing pang which seizes

The trusting bosom, when betray’d.

He felt it—deeply felt—and stood,
As if the tale had frozen his blood,
So mazed and motionless was he ;—
Like one whom sudden spells enchant,
Or some mute, marble habitant
Of the still Halls of ISHMONIE ! *

But soon the painful chill was o'er,
And his great soul, herself once more,
Look'd from his brow in all the rays
Of her best, happiest, grandest days !
Never, in moment most elate,
Did that high spirit loftier rise ;—
While bright, serene, determinate,
His looks are lifted to the skies,
As if the signal-lights of Fate
Were shining in those awful eyes !
'Tis come—his hour of martyrdom
In IRAN'S sacred cause is come ;
And, though his life has pass'd away
Like lightning on a stormy day,

* For an account of Ishmonie, the petrified city in Upper Egypt, where it is said there are many statues of men, women, etc. to be seen to this day, see PERRY'S View of the Levant.

Yet shall his death-hour leave a track
Of glory, permanent and bright,
To which the brave of after-times,
The suffering brave, shall long look back
With proud regret,—and by its light
Watch through the hours of slavery's night
For vengeance on the oppressor's crimes!
This rock, his monument aloft,
Shall speak the tale to many an age;
And hither bards and heroes oft
Shall come in secret pilgrimage,
And bring their warrior sons, and tell
The wondering boys where HAFED fell,
And swear them on those lone remains
Of their lost country's ancient fanes,
Never—while breath of life shall live
Within them—never to forgive
Th' accursed race, whose ruthless chain
Hath left on IRAN'S neck a stain
Blood, blood alone can cleanse again!

Such are the swelling thoughts that now
Enthroned themselves on HAFED'S brow;

And ne'er did Saint of Issa * gaze
On the red wreath, for martyrs twined,
More proudly than the youth surveys
That pile, which through the gloom behind,
Half lighted by the altar's fire,
Glimmers,—his destined funeral pyre !
Heap'd by his own, his comrades' hands,
Of every wood of odorous breath,
There, by the Fire-God's shrine it stands,
Ready to fold in radiant death
The few still left of those who swore
To perish there, when hope was o'er—
The few, to whom that couch of flame,
Which rescues them from bonds and shame,
Is sweet and welcome as the bed
For their own infant Prophet spread,
When pitying Heaven to roses turn'd
The death-flames that beneath him burn'd ! †
With watchfulness the maid attends
His rapid glance, where'er it bends—

* Jesus.

† The Ghebers say that when Abraham, their great Prophet, was thrown into the fire by order of Nimrod, the flame turned instantly into "a bed of roses, where the child sweetly reposed."—Tavernier.

Why shoot his eyes such awful beams ?
What plans he now ? what thinks or dreams ?
Alas ! why stands he musing here,
When every moment teems with fear ?

“ HAFED, my own beloved Lord,”

She kneeling cries—“ first, last adored !

“ If in that soul thou’st ever felt

“ Half what thy lips impassion’d swore,

“ Here, on my knees, that never knelt

“ To any but their God before,

“ I pray thee, as thou lovest me, fly,

“ Now, now—ere yet their blades are nigh.

“ Oh haste—the bark that bore me hither

“ Can waft us o’er yon darkening sea

“ East—west—alas, I care not whither,

“ So thou art safe, and I with thee !

“ Go where we will, this hand in thine,

“ Those eyes before me smiling thus,

“ Through good and ill, through storm and shine,

“ The world’s a world of love for us !

“ On some calm, blessed shore we’ll dwell,

“ Where ’tis no crime to love too well ;—

“ Where thus to worship tenderly
“ An erring child of light like thee
“ Will not be sin—or, if it be,
“ Where we may weep our faults away,
“ Together kneeling, night and day,
“ Thou, for my sake, at ALLA’s shrine,
“ And I—at any God’s, for thine !”

Wildly these passionate words she spoke—
Then hung her head, and wept for shame ;
Sobbing, as if a heart-string broke
With every deep-heaved sob that came.
While he, young, warm—oh ! wonder not
If, for a moment, pride and fame,
His oath—his cause—that shrine of flame,
And IRAN’S self are all forgot
For her whom at his feet he sees,
Kneeling in speechless agonies.
No, blame him not, if Hope awhile
Dawn’d in his soul, and threw her smile
O’er hours to come—o’er days and nights
Wing’d with those precious, pure delights
Which she, who bends all beauteous there,
Was born to kindle and to share !

A tear or two, which, as he bow'd
To raise the suppliant, trembling stole,
First warn'd him of this dangerous cloud
Of softness passing o'er his soul.

Starting, he brush'd the drops away,
Unworthy o'er that cheek to stray;—
Like one who, on the morn of fight,
Shakes from his sword the dew of night,
That had but dimm'd, not stain'd its light.

Yet, though subdued th' unnerving thrill,
Its warmth, its weakness linger'd still

So touching in each look and tone,
That the fond, fearing, hoping maid
Half counted on the flight she pray'd,

Half thought the hero's soul was grown

As soft, as yielding as her own,

And smiled and bless'd him, while he said,—

“ Yes—if there be some happier sphere,

“ Where fadeless truth like ours is dear;—

“ If there be any land of rest

“ For those who love and ne'er forget,

“ Oh! comfort thee—for safe and blest

“ We'll meet in that calm region yet!”

Scarce had she time to ask her heart
If good or ill these words impart,
When the roused youth impatient flew
To the tower-wall, where, high in view,
A ponderous sea-horn * hung, and blew
A signal, deep and dread as those
The storm-fiend at his rising blows.—
Full well his Chieftains, sworn and true
Through life and death, that signal knew;
For 'twas th' appointed warning-blast,
Th' alarm, to tell when hope was past,
And the tremendous death-die cast!
And there, upon the mouldering tower,
Hath hung this sea-horn many an hour,
Ready to sound o'er land and sea
That dirge-note of the brave and free.

They came—his Chieftains at the call
Came slowly round, and with them all—
Alas, how few!—the worn remains
Of those who late o'er KERMAN's plains

* “ The shell called Siiankos, common to India, Africa, and the Mediterranean, and still used in many parts as a trumpet for blowing alarms or giving signals : it sends forth a deep and hollow sound.”—PENNANT.

Went gaily prancing to the clash
Of Moorish zel and tymbalon,
Catching new hope from every flash
Of their long lances in the sun—
And, as their coursers charged the wind,
And the white ox-tails stream'd behind, *
Looking, as if the steeds they rode
Were wing'd, and every Chief a God !
How fallen, how alter'd now ! how wan
Each scarr'd and faded visage shone,
As round the burning shrine they came ;—
How deadly was the glare it cast,
As mute they paused before the flame
To light their torches as they pass'd !
'Twas silence all—the youth had plann'd
The duties of his soldier-band ;
And each determined brow declares
His faithful Chieftains well know theirs.

But minutes speed—night gems the skies—
And oh how soon, ye blessed eyes,

* “ The finest ornament for the horses is made of six large flying tassels of long white hair, taken out of the tails of wild oxen, that are to be found in some places of the Indies.”— THEVENOT.

That look from Heaven, ye may behold
Sights that will turn your star-fires cold !
Breathless with awe, impatience, hope,
The maiden sees the veteran group
Her litter silently prepare,

And lay it at her trembling feet ;—
And now the youth, with gentle care,
Hath placed her in the shelter'd seat,
And press'd her hand—that lingering press
Of hands, that for the last time sever ;
Of hearts, whose pulse of happiness,
When that hold breaks is dead for ever.

And yet to her this sad caress
Gives hope—so fondly hope can err !

'Twas joy, she thought, joy's mute excess—
Their happy flight's dear harbinger ;
'Twas warmth—assurance—tenderness—
'Twas any thing but leaving her.

“ Haste, haste ! ” she cried, “ the clouds grow dark,
“ But still, ere night, we'll reach the bark ;
“ And, by to-morrow's dawn—oh bliss !—
“ With thee upon the sun-bright deep,
“ Far off, I'll but remember this,
“ As some dark vanish'd dream of sleep !

“ And thou——” but ha !—he answers not—

Good Heaven !—and does she go alone ?

She now has reach’d that dismal spot,

Where, some hours since, his voice’s tone
Had come to soothe her fears and ills,

Sweet as the Angel ISRAFIL’S,*

When every leaf on Eden’s tree

Is trembling to his minstrelsy—

Yet now—oh now, he is not nigh—

“ HAFED ! my HAFED !—if it be

“ Thy will, thy doom this night to die,

“ Let me but stay to die with thee,

“ And I will bless thy loved name,

“ ’Till the last life-breath leave this frame.

“ Oh ! let our lips, our cheeks be laid

“ But near each other while they fade ;

“ Let us but mix our parting breaths,

“ And I can die ten thousand deaths !

“ You too, who hurry me away

“ So cruelly, one moment stay—

“ Oh ! stay—one moment is not much,

“ He yet may come—for him I pray—

* “ The Angel Israfil, who has the most melodious voice of all God’s creatures.”—SALE.

“ HAFED ! dear HAFED !—” all the way
In wild lamentings, that would touch
A heart of stone, she shriek’d his name
To the dark woods—no HAFED came :—
No—hapless pair—you’ve looked your last ;
Your hearts should both have broken then :
The dream is o’er—your doom is cast—
You’ll never meet on earth again !

Alas for him, who hears her cries !—
Still half-way down the steep he stands,
Watching with fix’d and feverish eyes
The glimmer of those burning brands,
That down the rocks, with mournful ray,
Light all he loves on earth away !
Hopeless as they who, far at sea,
By the cold moon have just consign’d
The corse of one, loved tenderly,
To the bleak flood they leave behind ;
And on the deck still lingering stay,
And long look back, with sad delay,
To watch the moonlight on the wave,
That ripples o’er that cheerless grave.

But see—he starts—what heard he then?
That dreadful shout!—across the glen
From the land side it comes, and loud
Rings through the chasm; as if the crowd
Of fearful things, that haunt that dell,
Its Gholes and Dives and shapes of hell
Had all in one dread howl broke out,
So loud, so terrible that shout!

“ They come—the Moslems come ! ”—he cries,
His proud soul mounting to his eyes,—
“ Now, Spirits of the Brave, who roam
“ Enfranchised through yon starry dome,
“ Rejoice—for souls of kindred fire
“ Are on the wing to join your choir ! ”

He said—and, light as bridegrooms bound

To their young loves, reclimb'd the steep
And gain'd the shrine—his Chiefs stood round—

Their swords, as with instinctive leap,
Together, at that cry accurst,
Had from their sheaths, like sunbeams, burst.

And hark!—again—again it rings;

Near and more near its echoings

Peal through the chasm—oh! who that then

Had seen those listening warrior-men,

With their swords grasp'd, their eyes of flame
Turn'd on their Chief—could doubt the shame,
Th' indignant shame with which they thrill
To hear those shouts and yet stand still?

He read their thoughts—they were his own—

“What! while our arms can wield these blades,

“Shall we die tamely? die alone?

“Without one victim to our shades,

“One Moslem heart where, buried deep,

“The sabre from its toil may sleep?

“No—God of IRAN's burning skies!

“Thou scorn'st th' inglorious sacrifice.

“No—though of all earth's hope bereft,

“Life, swords, and vengeance still are left.

“We'll make yon valley's reeking caves

“Live in the awe-struck minds of men,

“Till tyrants shudder, when their slaves

“Tell of the Gheber's bloody glen.

“Follow, brave hearts!—this pile remains

“Our refuge still from life and chains;

“But his the best, the holiest bed,

“Who sinks entomb'd in Moslem dead!”

Down the precipitous rocks they sprung,
While vigour, more than human, strung
Each arm and heart.—Th' exulting foe
Still through the dark defiles below,
Track'd by his torches' lurid fire,

Wound slow, as through GOLCONDA'S vale*
The mighty serpent, in his ire,
Glides on with glittering, deadly trail.

No torch the Ghebers need—so well
They know each mystery of the dell,
So oft have, in their wanderings,
Cross'd the wild race that round them dwell,

The very tigers from their delves
Look out, and let them pass, as things
Untamed and fearless like themselves!

There was a deep ravine, that lay
Yet darkling in the Moslem's way;—
Fit spot to make invaders rue
The many fallen before the few.
The torrents from that morning's sky
Had fill'd the narrow chasm breast-high,

* See HOOLE upon the story of Sinbad.

And, on each side, aloft and wild,
Huge cliffs and toppling crags were piled,
The guards, with which young Freedom lines
The pathways to her mountain shrines.
Here, at this pass, the scanty band
Of IRAN'S last avengers stand —
Here wait, in silence like the dead,
And listen for the Moslem's tread
So anxiously, the carrion-bird
Above them flaps his wing unheard!

They come—that plunge into the water
Gives signal for the work of slaughter.
Now, Ghebers, now—if e'er your blades
Had point or prowess, prove them now—
Woe to the file that foremost wades!

They come—a falchion greets each brow,
And, as they tumble, trunk on trunk,
Beneath the gory waters sunk,
Still o'er their drowning bodies press
New victims quick and numberless;
Till scarce an arm in HAFED'S band,
So fierce their toil, hath power to stir,

But listless from each crimson hand
The sword hangs, clogg'd with massacre.
Never was horde of tyrants met
With bloodier welcome—never yet
To patriot vengeance hath the sword
More terrible libations pour'd!
All up the dreary, long ravine,
By the red, murky glimmer seen
Of half-quench'd brands, that o'er the flood
Lie scatter'd round and burn in blood,
What ruin glares! what carnage swims!
Heads, blazing turbans, quivering limbs,
Lost swords that, dropp'd from many a hand,
In that thick pool of slaughter stand;—
Wretches who wading, half on fire
From the toss'd brands that round them fly,
'Twixt flood and flame in shrieks expire;—
And some who, grasp'd by those that die,
Sink woundless with them, smother'd o'er
In their dead brethren's gushing gore!

But vainly hundreds, thousands bleed,
Still hundreds, thousands more succeed;—

Countless as tow'rds some flame at night
The North's dark insects wing their flight,
And quench or perish in its light,
To this terrific spot they pour—
Till, bridged with Moslem bodies o'er,
It bears aloft their slippery tread,
And o'er the dying and the dead,
Tremendous causeway! on they pass.—

Then, hapless Ghebers, then, alas,
What hope was left for you? for you,
Whose yet warm pile of sacrifice
Is smoking in their vengeful eyes—

Whose swords how keen, how fierce they knew,

And burn with shame to find how few.

Crush'd down by that vast multitude,
Some found their graves where first they stood;
While some with hardier struggle died,
And still fought on by HAFED's side,
Who, fronting to the foe, trod back
Tow'rds the high towers his gory track;
And, as a lion, swept away

By sudden swell of JORDAN's pride

From the wild covert where he lay,*

Long battles with th' o'erwhelming tide,
So fought he back with fierce delay,
And kept both foes and fate at bay.

But whither now? their track is lost,

Their prey escaped—guide, torches gone—
By torrent-beds and labyrinths crost,

The scatter'd crowd rush blindly on—

“Curse on those tardy lights that wind,”

They panting cry, “so far behind—

“Oh for a blood-hound's precious scent,

“To tract the way the Gheber went!”

Vain wish—confusedly along

They rush, more desperate as more wrong:

Till, wilder'd by the far-off lights,

Yet glittering up those gloomy heights,

Their footing, mazed and lost, they miss,

And down the darkling precipice

Are dash'd into the deep abyss;—

* “In this thicket, upon the banks of the Jordan, several sorts of wild beasts are wont to harbour themselves, whose being washed out of the covert by the overflowings of the river gave occasion to that allusion of Jeremiah, he shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan.”—MAUNDRELL'S Aleppo.

Or midway hang, impaled on rocks,
A banquet, yet alive, for flocks
Of ravening vultures,—while the dell
Re-echoes with each horrible yell.

Those sounds—the last, to vengeance dear,
That e'er shall ring in HAFED'S ear,—
Now reach'd him, as aloft, alone,
Upon the steep way breathless thrown,
He lay beside his reeking blade,
Resign'd, as if life's task were o'er,
Its last blood-offering amply paid,
And IRAN'S self could claim no more.

One only thought, one lingering beam
Now broke across his dizzy dream
Of pain and weariness—'twas she
His heart's pure planet, shining yet
Above the waste of memory,

When all life's other lights were set.
And never to his mind before
Her image such enchantment wore.
It seem'd as if each thought that stain'd,
Each fear that chill'd their loves was past,

And not one cloud of earth remain'd
Between him and her glory cast;—
As if to charms, before so bright,
New grace from other worlds was given,
And his soul saw her by the light
Now breaking o'er itself from Heaven!

A voice spoke near him—'twas the tone
Of a loved friend, the only one
Of all his warriors left with life
From that short night's tremendous strife.—

“And must we then, my Chief, die here?—

“Foes round us, and the Shrine so near!”

These words have roused the last remains

Of life within him—“what! not yet

“Beyond the reach of Moslem chains!”—

The thought could make even Death forget

His icy bondage—with a bound

He springs, all bleeding, from the ground,

And grasps his comrade's arm, now grown

Even feebler, heavier than his own,

And up the painful pathway leads,

Death gaining on each step he treads.

Speed them, thou God, who heard'st their vow!

They mount—they bleed—oh save them now—
The crags are red they've clamber'd o'er,
The rock-weed's dripping with their gore—
Thy blade too, HAFED, false at length,
Now breaks beneath thy tottering strength—
Haste, haste—the voices of the foe
Come near and nearer from below—
One effort more—thank Heaven! 'tis past,
They've gain'd the topmost steep at last.
And now they touch the temple's walls,

Now HAFED sees the Fire divine—
When, lo!—his weak, worn comrade falls
Dead on the threshold of the Shrine.

“Alas, brave soul, too quickly fled!

“And must I leave thee withering here,

“The sport of every ruffian's tread,

“The mark for every coward's spear?

“No, by yon altar's sacred beams!”

He cries, and, with a strength that seems
Not of this world, uplifts the frame
Of the fallen Chief, and tow'rd's the flame

Bears him along;—with death-damp hand
The corpse upon the pyre he lays,
Then lights the consecrated brand,
And fires the pile, whose sudden blaze
Like lightning bursts o'er OMAN'S Sea.—
“Now, Freedom's God! I come to Thee,”
The youth exclaims, and with a smile
Of triumph vaulting on the pile,
In that last effort, ere the fires
Have harm'd one glorious limb, expires!

What shriek was that on OMAN'S tide?

It came from yonder drifting bark,
That just has caught upon her side

The death-light—and again is dark.
It is the boat—ah, why delay'd?—
That bears the wretched Moslem maid;
Confided to the watchful care

Of a small veteran band, with whom
Their generous Chieftain would not share
The secret of his final doom;
But hoped when HINDA, safe and free,
Was render'd to her father's eyes,

Their pardon, full and prompt, would be

The ransom of so dear a prize.—

Unconscious, thus, of HAFED's fate,

And proud to guard their beauteous freight,

Scarce had they clear'd the surfy waves

That foam around those frightful caves,

When the curst war-whoops, known so well,

Came echoing from the distant dell—

Sudden each oar, upheld and still,

Hung dripping o'er the vessel's side,

And, driving at the current's will,

They rock'd along the whispering tide,

While every eye, in mute dismay,

Was tow'rd that fatal mountain turn'd,

Where the dim altar's quivering ray

As yet all lone and tranquil burn'd.

Oh ! 'tis not, HINDA, in the power

Of Fancy's most terrific touch

To paint thy pangs in that dread hour—

Thy silent agony—'twas such

As those who feel could paint too well,

But none e'er felt and lived to tell !

'Twas not alone the dreary state
Of a lorn spirit, crush'd by fate,
When, though no more remains to dread,

The panic chill will not depart ;—
When, though the inmate Hope be dead,

Her ghost still haunts the mouldering heart.

No—pleasures, hopes, affections gone,
The wretch may bear, and yet live on,
Like things within the cold rock found
Alive, when all's congeal'd around.

But there's a blank repose in this,
A calm stagnation, that were bliss
To the keen, burning, harrowing pain,
Now felt through all thy breast and brain—
That spasm of terror, mute, intense,
That breathless, agonised suspense,
From whose hot throb, whose deadly aching
The heart hath no relief but breaking !

Calm is the wave—Heaven's brilliant lights

Reflected dance beneath the prow ;—
Time was when, on such lovely nights,
She who is there, so desolate now,

Could sit all cheerful, though alone,
And ask no happier joy than seeing
That star-light o'er the waters thrown—
No joy but that to make her blest,
And the fresh, buoyant sense of Being
That bounds in youth's yet careless breast,—
Itself a star, not borrowing light,
But in its own glad essence bright.
How different now!—but, hark, again
The yell of havoc rings—brave men!
In vain, with beating hearts, ye stand
On the bark's edge—in vain each hand
Half draws the falchion from its sheath;
All's o'er—in rust your blades may lie;—
He, at whose word they've scatter'd death,
Even now, this night, himself must die!
Well may ye look to yon dim tower,
And ask, and wondering guess what means
The battle-cry at this dead hour—
Ah! she could tell you—she, who leans
Unheeded there, pale, sunk, aghast,
With brow against the dew-cold mast—
Too well she knows—her more than life,

Her soul's first idol and its last,
Lies bleeding in that murderous strife.

But see—what moves upon the height?
Some signal!—'tis a torch's light.

What bodes its solitary glare?
In gasping silence tow'rd the shrine
All eyes are turn'd—thine, HINDA, thine
Fix their last failing life-beams there.

'Twas but a moment—fierce and high
The death-pile blazed into the sky,
And far away o'er rock and flood

Its melancholy radiance sent ;
While HAFED, like a vision, stood
Reveal'd before the burning pyre,
Tall, shadowy, like a Spirit of Fire

Shrined in its own grand element !
“ 'Tis he!”—the shuddering maid exclaims,—
But, while she speaks, he's seen no more ;
High burst in air the funeral flames,
And IRAN's hopes and hers are o'er !

One wild, heart-broken shriek she gave—
Then sprung, as if to reach the blaze,

Where still she fix'd her dying gaze,
And, gazing, sunk into the wave,—
Deep, deep,—where never care or pain
Shall reach her innocent heart again!

Farewel—farewel to thee, ARABY'S daughter!
(Thus warbled a PERI beneath the dark sea)—
No pearl ever lay, under OMAN'S green water,
More pure in its shell than thy Spirit in thee.

Oh! fair as the sea-flower close to thee growing,
How light was thy heart 'till Love's witchery came,
Like the wind of the south * o'er a summer lute blowing,
And hush'd all its music and wither'd its frame!

But long, upon ARABY'S green sunny highlands,
Shall maids and their lovers remember the doom
Of her, who lies sleeping among the Pearl Islands,
With nought but the sea-star † to light up her tomb.

* "This wind (the Samoor) so softens the strings of lutes, that they can never be tuned while it lasts."—STEPHEN'S Persia.

† "One of the greatest curiosities found in the Persian Gulf is a fish which the English call Star-Fish. It is circular, and

And still, when the merry date-season is burning,
And calls to the palm-groves the young and the old, *
The happiest there, from their pastime returning,
At sunset, will weep when thy story is told.

The young village maid, when with flowers she dresses
Her dark flowing hair for some festival day,
Will think of thy fate till, neglecting her tresses,
She mournfully turns from the mirror away.

Nor shall IRAN, beloved of her Hero! forget thee,—
Though tyrants watch over her tears as they start,
Close, close by the side of that Hero she'll set thee,
Embalm'd in the innermost shrine of her heart.

Farewel—be it ours to embellish thy pillow
With every thing beauteous that grows in the deep;
Each flower of the rock and each gem of the billow
Shall sweeten thy bed and illumine thy sleep.

at night very luminous, resembling the full moon surrounded by rays."—MIRZA ABU TALEB.

* For a description of the merriment of the date-time, of their work, their dances, and their return home from the palm-groves at the end of autumn with the fruits, see KEMPFER, Amœnitat. Exot.

Around thee shall glisten the loveliest amber
That ever the sorrowing sea-bird has wept; *
With many a shell, in whose hollow-wreathed chamber,
We, Peris of Ocean, by moonlight have slept.

We'll dive where the gardens of coral lie darkling,
And plant all the rosiest stems at thy head;
We'll seek where the sands of the Caspian † are sparkling,
And gather their gold to strew over thy bed.

Farewel—farewel—until Pity's sweet fountain
Is lost in the hearts of the fair and the brave,
They'll weep for the Chieftain who died on that mountain,
They'll weep for the Maiden who sleeps in this wave.

* Some naturalists have imagined that amber is a concretion of the tears of birds.—See TREVoux, CHAMBERS.

† “The bay Kieselarke, which is otherwise called the Golden Bay, the sand whereof shines as fire.”—STRUY.

THE singular placidity with which FADLADEEN had listened, during the latter part of this obnoxious story, surprised the Princess and FERAMORZ exceedingly; and even inclined towards him the hearts of these unsuspecting young persons, who little knew the source of a complacency so marvellous. The truth was, he had been organizing, for the last few days, a most notable plan of persecution against the poet, in consequence of some passages that had fallen from him on the second evening of recital,—which appeared to this worthy Chamberlain to contain language and principles, for which nothing short of the summary criticism of the Chabuk* would be advisable. It was his intention, therefore, immediately on their arrival at Cashmere, to give information to the King of Bucharia of the very dangerous sentiments of his minstrel; and if, unfortunately, that monarch did not act with suitable vigour on the occasion (that is, if he did not give the Chabuk to FERAMORZ, and a place to FADLADEEN), there would be an end, he feared, of all legitimate government in Bucharia. He could not help, however, auguring better both for himself and the cause of potentates in general; and it was the pleasure arising from these mingled anticipations that diffused such unusual satisfaction through his features, and made his eyes shine out, like poppies of the desert, over the wide and lifeless wilderness of that countenance.

* “The application of whips or rods.”—DUBOIS.

Having decided upon the poet's chastisement in this manner, he thought it but humanity to spare him the minor tortures of criticism. Accordingly, when they assembled next evening in the pavilion, and LALLA ROOKH expected to see all the beauties of her bard melt away, one by one, in the acidity of criticism, like pearls in the cup of the Egyptian Queen,—he agreeably disappointed her by merely saying, with an ironical smile, that the merits of such a poem deserved to be tried at a much higher tribunal; and then suddenly passing off into a panegyric upon all Mussulman sovereigns, more particularly his august and imperial master, Aurungzebe,—the wisest and best of the descendants of Timur,—who, among other great things he had done for mankind, had given to him, FADLADEEN, the very profitable posts of Betel-Carrier and Taster of Sherbets to the Emperor, Chief Holder of the Girdle of beautiful Forms, * and Grand Nazir, or Chamberlain of the Haram.

They were now not far from that Forbidden River, † beyond which no pure Hindoo can pass; and were reposing for a time in the rich valley of Hussun Abdaul, which had always been a favourite resting-place of the Emperors in their annual migrations to Cashmere. Here often had the Light of the Faith, Jehanguire, wandered with his beloved and beautiful Nourmahal; and here would LALLA ROOKH have been happy to remain for ever, giving up the throne of Bucharia and the world, for FERAMORZ and love in this sweet lonely valley. The time was now fast approaching when she must see him no longer,—or see him with eyes whose every look belonged to another; and there was a melancholy preciousness in these last moments, which made her heart cling to them as it would to life. During the latter part of the journey, indeed, she had sunk into a deep sadness, from which nothing but the presence of the young minstrel could awake her. Like those lamps in tombs, which only light up when the air is admitted, it was only at his approach that her eyes became smiling and animated. But here, in this dear valley, every moment was an age of pleasure; she saw him all day, and was, therefore, all day happy,—resembling, she often thought, that people of Zinge, who attribute the unfading cheerfulness they enjoy to one genial star that rises nightly over their heads. *

* KEMPFER mentions such an officer among the attendants of the King of Persia, and calls him “formæ corporis estimator.” His business was, at stated periods, to measure the ladies of the Haram by a sort of regulation-girdle, whose limits it was not thought graceful to exceed. If any of them outgrew this standard of shape, they were reduced by abstinence till they came within its bounds.

† The Attock.

The whole party, indeed, seemed in their liveliest mood during the few days they passed in this delightful solitude. The young attendants of the Princess, who were here allowed a freer range than they could safely be indulged with in a less sequestered place, ran wild among the gardens and bounded through the meadows, lightly as young roes over the aromatic plains of Tibet. While FADLADEEN, beside the spiritual comfort he derived from a pilgrimage to the tomb of the Saint from whom the valley is named, had opportunities of gratifying, in a small way, his taste for victims, by putting to death some hundreds of those unfortunate little lizards, which all pious Mussulmans make it a point to kill;—taking for granted, that the manner in which the creature hangs its head is meant as a mimicry of the attitude in which the Faithful say their prayers!

* The star Soheil, or Canopus.

About two miles from Hussun Abdaul were those Royal Gardens, which had grown beautiful under the care of so many lovely eyes, and were beautiful still, though those eyes could see them no longer. This place, with its flowers and its holy silence, interrupted only by the dipping of the wings of birds in its marble basins filled with the pure water of those hills, was to LALLA ROOKH all that her heart could fancy of fragrance, coolness, and almost heavenly tranquillity. As the Prophet said of Damascus, “it was too delicious;”—and here, in listening to the sweet voice of FERAMORZ, or reading in his eyes what yet he never dared to tell her, the most exquisite moments of her whole life were passed. One evening, when they had been talking of the Sultana Nourmahal,—the Light of the Haram,* who had so often wandered among these flowers, and fed with her own hands, in those marble basins, the small shining fishes of which she was so fond, † —the youth, in order to delay the moment of separation, proposed to recite a short story, or rather rhapsody, of which this adored Sultana was the heroine. It related, he said, to the reconciliation of a sort of lovers' quarrel, which took place between her and the Emperor during a Feast of Roses at Cashmere; and would remind the Princess of that difference between Haroun-al-Raschid and his fair mistress Marida, which was so happily made up by the soft strains of the musician, Moussali. As the story was chiefly to be told in song, and FERAMORZ had unluckily forgotten his own lute in the valley, he borrowed the vina of LALLA ROOKH's little Persian slave, and thus began:—

* Nourmahal signifies Light of the Haram. She was afterwards called Nourjehan, or the Light of the World.

† See note, p. 230.

THE LIGHT OF THE HARAM.

WHO has not heard of the Vale of CASHMERE,

With its roses, the brightest that earth ever gave, *
Its temples, and grottos, and fountains as clear
As the love-lighted eyes that hang over their wave?

Oh! to see it at sunset,—when warm o'er the Lake
Its splendour at parting a summer eve throws,
Like a bride full of blushes, when lingering to take
A last look of her mirror at night ere she goes!—
When the shrines through the foliage are gleaming half shown,

And each hallows the hour by some rites of its own.

Here the music of prayer from a minaret swells,

Here the Magian his urn full of perfume is swinging,
And here, at the altar, a zone of sweet bells

Round the waist of some fair Indian dancer is ringing. †

* “The rose of Kashmire, for its brilliancy and delicacy of odour, has long been proverbial in the East.”—FORSTER.

† “Tied round her waist the zone of bells, that sounded with ravishing melody.”—Song of Jayadeva.

Or to see it by moonlight,—when mellowly shines
The light o'er its palaces, gardens, and shrines ;
When the water-falls gleam like a quick fall of stars,
And the nightingale's hymn from the Isle of Chenars
Is broken by laughs and light echoes of feet
From the cool, shining walks where the young people meet:—

Or at morn, when the magic of daylight awakes
A new wonder each minute, as slowly it breaks,
Hills, cupolas, fountains, call'd forth every one
Out of darkness, as they were just born of the Sun,—
When the Spirit of Fragrance is up with the day,
From his Haram of night-flowers stealing away ;
And the wind, full of wantonness, woos like a lover,
The young aspen-trees * till they tremble all over.—
When the East is as warm as the light of first hopes,
And Day with his banner of radiance unfurl'd,
Shines in through the mountainous † portal that opes,
Sublime, from that Valley of bliss to the world !

* “ The little isles in the Lake of Cachemire are set with arbours and large-leaved aspen-trees, slender and tall.”—BER-NIER.

† “ The Tuct Suliman, the name bestowed by the Mahometans on this hill, forms one side of a grand portal to the Lake.”—FORSTER.

But never yet, by night or day,
 In dew of spring or summer's ray,
 Did the sweet Valley shine so gay
 As now it shines—all love and light,
 Visions by day and feasts by night !
 A happier smile illumines each brow,
 With quicker spread each heart uncloses,
 And all is ecstasy,—for now

The Valley holds its Feast of Roses. *
 That joyous time, when pleasures pour
 Profusely round, and in their shower
 Hearts open, like the Season's Rose,—

The Flowret of a hundred leaves, †
 Expanding while the dew-fall flows,
 And every leaf its balm receives !

'Twas when the hour of evening came
 Upon the Lake, serene and cool,
 When Day had hid his sultry flame
 Behind the palms of BARAMOULE: §

* “ The Feast of Roses continues the whole time of their remaining in bloom.”—See PIETRO DE LA VALLE.

† “ Gul sad berk, the Rose of a hundred leaves. I believe a particular species.”—OUSELEY.

§ Bernier.

When maids began to lift their heads,
Refresh'd, from their embroider'd beds,
Where they had slept the sun away,
And waked to moonlight and to play.
All were abroad—the busiest hive
On BELA's* hills is less alive
When saffron beds are full in flower,
Than look'd the Valley in that hour.
A thousand restless torches play'd
Through every grove and island shade;
A thousand sparkling lamps were set
On every dome and minaret;
And fields and pathways, far and near,
Were lighted by a blaze so clear,
That you could see, in wandering round,
The smallest rose-leaf on the ground.
Yet did the maids and matrons leave
Their veils at home, that brilliant eve;
And there were glancing eyes about,
And cheeks, that would not dare shine out

* A place mentioned in the Toozek Jehangeery, or Memoirs of Jehanguire, where there is an account of the beds of saffron flowers about Cashmere.

In open day, but thought they might
Look lovely then, because 'twas night !
And all were free, and wandering,
And all exclaim'd to all they met
That never did the summer bring
So gay a Feast of Roses yet ;—
The moon had never shed a light
So clear as that which bless'd them there ;
The roses ne'er shone half so bright,
Nor they themselves look'd half so fair.
And what a wilderness of flowers !
It seem'd as though from all the bowers
And fairest fields of all the year,
The mingled spoil were scatter'd here.
The Lake, too, like a garden breathes
With the rich buds that o'er it lie,—
As if a shower of fairy wreaths
Had fallen upon it from the sky !
And then the sounds of joy,—the beat
Of tabors and of dancing feet ;—
The minaret-cryer's chaunt of glee
Sung from his lighted gallery,*

* “ It is the custom among the women to employ the Maa-zeen to chaunt from the gallery of the nearest minaret, which

And answer'd by a ziraleet
From neighbouring Haram, wild and sweet ;—
The merry laughter, echoing
From gardens, where the silken swing
Wafts some delighted girl above
The top leaves of the orange grove ;
Or, from those infant groups at play
Among the tents* that line the way,
Flinging, unawed by slave or mother,
Handfuls of roses at each other !—
And the sounds from the Lake,—the low whispering in boats,
As they shoot through the moonlight ;—the dipping of oars,
And the wild, airy warbling that every where floats
Through the groves, round the islands, as if all the shores

on that occasion is illuminated, and the women assembled at the house respond at intervals with a ziraleet or joyous chorus.”—RUSSELL.

* “ At the keeping of the Feast of Roses, we beheld an infinite number of tents pitched, with such a crowd of men, women, boys, and girls, with music, dances,” etc. etc.—HERBERT.

Like those of KATHAY utter'd music, and gave
An answer in song to the kiss of each wave ! *
But the gentlest of all are those sounds, full of feeling,
That soft from the lute of some lover are stealing,—
Some lover, who knows all the heart-touching power
Of a lute and a sigh in this magical hour.
Oh ! best of delights as it every where is
To be near the loved One,—what a rapture is his,
Who in moonlight and music thus sweetly may glide
O'er the Lake of CASHMERE, with that One by his side !
If Woman can make the worst wilderness dear,
Think, think what a Heaven she must make of CASHMERE !

So felt the magnificent Son of ACBAR, †
When from power and pomp and the trophies of war
He flew to that Valley, forgetting them all
With the Light of the Haram, his young NOURMAHAL.

* “ An old commentator of the Chou-King says, the ancients having remarked that a current of water made some of the stones near its banks send forth a sound, they detached some of them, and being charmed with the delightful sound they emitted, constructed King or musical instruments of them.”—GROSIER.

† Jehanguire was the son of the Great Acbar.

When free and uncrown'd as the Conqueror roved
By the banks of that Lake, with his only beloved,
He saw, in the wreaths she would playfully snatch
From the hedges, a glory his crown could not match,
And preferr'd in his heart the least ringlet that curl'd
Down her exquisite neck to the throne of the world !

There's a beauty for ever unchangingly bright,
Like the long, sunny lapse of a summer day's light,
Shining on, shining on, by no shadow made tender,
Till Love falls asleep in its sameness of splendour.
This was not the beauty—oh ! nothing like this,
That to young NOURMAHAL gave such magic of bliss ;
But that loveliness, ever in motion, which plays
Like the light upon autumn's soft shadowy days,
Now here and now there, giving warmth as it flies
From the lips to the cheek, from the cheek to the eyes,
Now melting in mist and now breaking in gleams,
Like the glimpses a saint hath of Heaven in his dreams !
When pensive, it seem'd as if that very grace,
That charm of all others, was born with her face,
And when angry,—for even in the tranquildest climes
Light breezes will ruffle the blossoms sometimes—

The short, passing anger but seem'd to awaken
New beauty, like flowers that are sweetest when shaken.
If tenderness touch'd her, the dark of her eye

At once took a darker, a heavenlier dye,
From the depth of whose shadow, like holy revealings
From innermost shrines, came the light of her feelings!
Then her mirth—oh! 'twas sportive as ever took wing
From the heart with a burst, like the wild-bird in spring ;—

Illumed by a wit that would fascinate sages,
Yet playful as Peris just loosed from their cages.*
While her laugh, full of life, without any controul
But the sweet one of gracefulness, rung from her soul ;
And where it most sparkled no glance could discover,
In lip, cheek, or eyes, for she brighten'd all over,—
Like any fair lake that the breeze is upon,
When it breaks into dimples and laughs in the sun.
Such, such were the peerless enchantments that gave
NOURMAHAL the proud Lord of the East for her slave ;

* In the wars of the Dives with the Peris, whenever the former took the latter prisoners, “ they shut them up in iron cages, and hung them on the highest trees. Here they were visited by their companions, who brought them the choicest odours.”—RICHARDSON.

And though bright was his Haram,—a living parterre
Of the flowers* of this planet—though treasures were there,

For which SOLIMAN's self might have given all the store
That the navy from OPHIR e'er wing'd to his shore,
Yet dim before her were the smiles of them all,
And the Light of his Haram was young NOURMAHAL !

But where is she now, this night of joy,
When bliss is every heart's employ?—
When all around her is so bright,
So like the visions of a trance,
That one might think, who came by chance
Into the vale this happy night,
He saw that City of Delight†
In Fairy-land, whose streets and towers
Are made of gems and light and flowers!—
Where is the loved Sultana? where,
When mirth brings out the young and fair,
Does she, the fairest, hide her brow,
In melancholy stillness now?

* In the Malay language the same word signifies women and flowers.

† The capital of Shadukiam. See note, p. 161.

Alas—how light a cause may move
Dissension between hearts that love !
Hearts that the world in vain had tried,
And sorrow but more closely tied ;
That stood the storm, when waves were rough,
Yet in a sunny hour fall off,
Like ships, that have gone down at sea,
When Heaven was all tranquillity !

A something, light as air—a look,

A word unkind or wrongly taken—

Oh ! love, that tempests never shook,

A breath, a touch like this hath shaken.

And ruder words will soon rush in

To spread the breach that words begin ;

And eyes forget the gentle ray

They wore in courtship's smiling day ;

And voices lose the tone that shed

A tenderness round all they said ;

Till fast declining, one by one,

The sweetnesss of love are gone,

And hearts, so lately mingled, seem

Like broken clouds,—or like the stream,

That smiling left the mountain's brow,

As though its waters ne'er could sever,

Yet, ere it reach the plain below,
Breaks into floods, that part for ever.

Oh you, that have the charge of Love,
Keep him in rosy bondage bound,
As in the Fields of Bliss above

He sits, with flowrets fetter'd round ;—*
Loose not a tie that round him clings,
Nor ever let him use his wings ;
For even an hour, a minute's flight
Will rob the plumes of half their light.
Like that celestial bird,—whose nest
Is found beneath far Eastern skies,—
Whose wings, though radiant when at rest,
Lose all their glory when he flies ! †

Some difference, of this dangerous kind,—
By which, though light, the links that bind

* See the representation of the Eastern Cupid, pinioned closely round with wreaths of flowers, in PICART'S Cérémonies Religieuses.

† “ Among the birds of Tonquin is a species of goldfinch, which sings so melodiously that it is called the Celestial Bird. Its wings, when it is perched, appear variegated with beautiful colours, but when it flies they lose all their splendour.”
—GROSIER.

The fondest hearts may soon be riven ;
Some shadow in love's summer heaven,
Which, though a fleecy speck at first,
May yet in awful thunder burst ;—
Such cloud it is, that now hangs over
The heart of the Imperial Lover,
And far hath banish'd from his sight
His NOURMAHAL, his Haram's Light !
Hence is it, on this happy night,
When Pleasure through the fields and groves
Has let loose all her world of loves,
And every heart has found its own,—
He wanders, joyless and alone,
And weary as that bird of Thrace,
Whose pinion knows no resting-place.*
In vain the loveliest cheeks and eyes
This Eden of the earth supplies
Come crowding round—the cheeks are pale,
The eyes are dim—though rich the spot
With every flower this earth has got,
What is it to the nightingale,

* “ As these birds on the Bosphorus are never known to rest, they are called by the French ‘ les âmes damnées.’ ”— DALLOWAY.

If there his darling rose is not ? *
In vain the Valley's smiling throng
Worship him, as he moves along ;
He heeds them not—one smile of hers
Is worth a world of worshippers.
They but the Star's adorers are,
She is the Heaven that lights the Star !

Hence is it too that NOURMAHAL,
Amid the luxuries of this hour,
Far from the joyous festival,
Sits in her own sequester'd bower,
With no one near, to soothe or aid,
But that inspired and wondrous maid,
NAMOUNA, the Enchantress ;—one,
O'er whom his race the golden Sun
For unremember'd years has run,
Yet never saw her blooming brow
Younger or fairer than 'tis now.
Nay, rather, as the west-wind's sigh
Freshens the flower it passes by,

* “ You may place a hundred handfuls of fragrant herbs and flowers before the nightingale, yet he wishes not, in his constant heart, for more than the sweet breath of his beloved rose.”—JAMI.

Time's wing but seem'd, in stealing o'er,
To leave her lovelier than before.
Yet on her smiles a sadness hung,
And when, as oft, she spoke or sung
Of other worlds, there came a light
From her dark eyes so strangely bright,
That all believed nor man nor earth
Were conscious of NAMOUNA's birth!

All spells and talismans she knew,
From the great Mantra,* which around
The Air's sublimer Spirits drew,
To the gold gems,† of AFRIC, bound
Upon the wandering Arab's arm,
To keep him from the Siltim's§ harm.
And she had pledged her powerful art,
Pledged it with all the zeal and heart
Of one who knew, though high her sphere,
What 'twas to lose a love so dear,

* "He is said to have found the great Mantra, spell or talisman, through which he ruled over the elements and spirits of all denominations."—WILFORD.

† "The gold jewels of Jinnie, which are called by the Arabs El Herrez, from the supposed charm they contain."—JACKSON.

§ "A demon, supposed to haunt woods, etc. in a human shape."—RICHARDSON.

To find some spell that should recal
Her SELIM'S * smile to NOURMAHAL!

'Twas midnight—through the lattice, wreathed
With woodbine, many a perfume breathed
From plants that wake when others sleep,
From timid jasmine buds, that keep
Their odour to themselves all day,
But, when the sun-light dies away,
Let the delicious secret out
To every breeze that roams about;—
When thus NAMOUNA :—“ 'Tis the hour
“ That scatters spells on herb and flower,
“ And garlands might be gather'd now,
“ That, twined around the sleeper's brow,
“ Would make him dream of such delights,
“ Such miracles and dazzling sights
“ As Genii of the Sun behold,
“ At evening, from their tents of gold
“ Upon the horizon—where they play
“ Till twilight comes, and, ray by ray,
“ Their sunny mansions melt away!

* The name of Jehanguire before his accession to the throne.

“ Now, too, a chaplet might be wreathed
 “ Of buds o’er which the moon has breathed,
 “ Which worn by her, whose love has stray’d,
 “ Might bring some Peri from the skies,
 “ Some sprite, whose very soul is made
 “ Of flowrets, breaths, and lovers’ sighs,
 “ And who might tell——”

“ For me, for me,”

Cried NOURMAHAL impatiently,—

“ Oh ! twine that wreath for me to-night.”

Then, rapidly, with foot as light

As the young musk-roe’s, out she flew

To cull each shining leaf that grew

Beneath the moonlight’s hallowing beams

For this enchanted Wreath of Dreams.

Anemones and Seas of Gold,*

And new-blown lilies of the river,

And those sweet flowrets, that unfold

Their buds on CAMADEVA’S quiver ;—†

* “ Hemasagara, or the Sea of Gold, with flowers of the brightest gold colour.”—SIR W. JONES.

† “ This tree (the Nagacesara) is one of the most delightful on earth, and the delicious odour of its blossoms justly gives them a place in the quiver of Camadeva, or the God of Love.”—Id.

The tube-rose, with her silvery light,
 That in the Gardens of MALAY
 Is call'd the Mistress of the Night, *
 So like a bride, scented and bright,
 She comes out when the sun's away.—
 Amaranths, such as crown the maids
 That wander through ZAMARA's shades ;—†
 And the white moon-flower, as it shows
 On SERENDIB's high crags to those
 Who near the isle at evening sail,
 Scenting her clove-trees in the gale ;—
 In short, all flowrets and all plants,
 From the divine Amrita tree, §
 That blesses Heaven's inhabitants
 With fruits of immortality,

* “ The Malaysans style the tube-rose (Polianthes tuberosa) Sandal Malam, or the Mistress of the Night.”—PENNANT.

† The people of the Batta country in Sumatra (of which Zamara is one of the ancient names) “ when not engaged in war, lead an idle, inactive life, passing the day in playing on a kind of flute, crowned with garlands of flowers, among which the globe-amaranthus, a native of the country, mostly prevails.”—MARSDEN.

§ “ The largest and richest sort (of the Jambu or rose-apple) is called Amrita or immortal, and the mythologists of Tibet apply the same word to a celestial tree, bearing ambrosial fruit.”—SIR W. JONES.

Down to the basil * tuft, that waves
Its fragrant blossom over graves,
And to the humble rosemary,
Whose sweets so thanklessly are shed
To scent the desert † and the dead,—
All in that garden bloom, and all
Are gather'd by young NOURMAHAL,
Who heaps her baskets with the flowers
And leaves, till they can hold no more,
Then to NAMOUNA flies, and showers
Upon her lap the shining store.

With what delight th' Enchantress views
So many buds, bathed with the dews
And beams of that bless'd hour!—her glance
Spoke something, past all mortal pleasures,
As, in a kind of holy trance,
She hung above those fragrant treasures,
Bending to drink their balmy airs,
As if she mix'd her soul with theirs.

* Sweet basil, called Rayhan, in Persia, and generally found in church-yards.

† “ In the Great Desert are found many stalks of lavender and rosemary.”—Asiat. Res.

And 'twas, indeed, the perfume shed
From flowers and scented flame that fed
Her charmed life—for none had e'er
Beheld her taste of mortal fare,
Nor ever in aught earthly dip,
But the morn's dew, her roseate lip.
Fill'd with the cool, inspiring smell,
Th' Enchantress now begins her spell,
Thus singing, as she winds and weaves
In mystic form the glittering leaves :—

I know where the winged visions dwell
That around the night-bed play ;
I know each herb and flowret's bell,
Where they hide their wings by day.
Then hasten we, maid,
To twine our braid,
To-morrow the dreams and flowers will fade.

The image of love, that nightly flies
To visit the bashful maid,
Steals from the jasmine flower, that sighs
Its soul, like her, in the shade.

The hope, in dreams, of a happier hour
That alights on misery's brow,
Springs out of the silvery almond-flower,
That blooms on a leafless bough. *

Then hasten we, maid,
To twine our braid,
To-morrow the dreams and flowers will fade.

The visions, that oft to worldly eyes
The glitter of mines unfold,
Inhabit the mountain-herb, † that dyes
The tooth of the fawn like gold.
The phantom shapes—oh touch not them—
That appal the murderer's sight,
Lurk in the fleshly mandrake's stem,
That shrieks, when torn at night!

Then hasten we, maid,
To twine our braid,
To-morrow the dreams and flowers will fade.

* "The almond-tree, with white flowers, blossoms on the bare branches."—HASSELQUIST.

† An herb on Mount Libanus, which is said to communicate a yellow golden hue to the teeth of the goats and other animals that graze upon it.

The dream of the injured, patient mind,
That smiles at the wrongs of men,
Is found in the bruised and wounded rind
Of the cinnamon, sweetest then!
Then hasten we, maid,
To twine our braid,
To-morrow the dreams and flowers will fade.

No sooner was the flowery crown
Placed on her head, than sleep came down,
Gently as nights of summer fall,
Upon the lids of NOURMAHAL ;—
And, suddenly, a tuneful breeze,
As full of small, rich harmonies
As ever wind, that o'er the tents
Of AZAB * blew, was full of scents,
Steals on her ear and floats and swells,
Like the first air of morning creeping
Into those wreathy, Red-Sea shells,
Where Love himself, of old, lay sleeping ;— †

* The myrrh country.

† “ This idea (of deities living in shells) was not unknown to the Greeks, who represent the young Nerites, one of the Cupids, as living in shells on the shores of the Red Sea.”—
WILFORD.

And now a Spirit form'd, 'twould seem,
Of music and of light, so fair,
So brilliantly his features beam,
And such a sound is in the air
Of sweetness, when he waves his wings,
Hovers around her, and thus sings :—

From CHINDARA'S * warbling fount I come,
Call'd by that moonlight garland's spell;
From CHINDARA'S fount, my fairy home,
Where in music, morn and night, I dwell;—
Where lutes in the air are heard about,
And voices are singing the whole day long,
And every sigh the heart breathes out
Is turn'd, as it leaves the lips, to song !

Hither I come
From my fairy home,
And if there's a magic in Music's strain,
I swear by the breath
Of that moonlight wreath,
Thy Lover shall sigh at thy feet again.

* “ A fabulous fountain, where instruments are said to be constantly playing.”—RICHARDSON.

For mine is the lay that lightly floats,
And mine are the murmuring, dying notes,
That fall as soft as snow on the sea,
And melt in the heart as instantly !
And the passionate strain that, deeply going,
Refines the bosom it trembles through,
As the musk-wind, over the water blowing,
Ruffles the wave, but sweetens it too !

Mine is the charm, whose mystic sway
The Spirits of past Delight obey ;—
Let but the tuneful talisman sound,
And they come, like Genii, hovering round.
And mine is the gentle song, that bears
From soul to soul, the wishes of love,
As a bird, that wafts through genial airs
The cinnamon seed from grove to grove. *

'Tis I that mingle in one sweet measure
The past, the present, and future of pleasure ;
When Memory links the tone that is gone
With the blissful tone that's still in the ear ;

* “ The Pompadour pigeon is the species, which, by carrying the fruit of the cinnamon to different places, is a great disseminator of this valuable tree.”—See BROWN'S Illustr. Tab. 19.

And Hope from a heavenly note flies on
To a note more heavenly still that is near!

The warrior's heart, when touch'd by me,
Can as downy soft and as yielding be
As his own white plume, that high amid death
Through the field has shone—yet moves with a breath.

And, oh how the eyes of Beauty glisten,
When Music has reach'd her inward soul,
Like the silent stars, that wink and listen
While Heaven's eternal melodies roll!

So, hither I come
From my fairy home,
And if there's a magic in Music's strain,
I swear by the breath
Of that moonlight wreath,
Thy Lover shall sigh at thy feet again.

'Tis dawn—at least that earlier dawn,
Whose glimpses are again withdrawn,*

* “ They have two mornings, the Soobhi Kazim, and the Soobhi Sadig, the false and the real day-break.”—WARING.

As if the morn had waked, and then
Shut close her lids of light again.
And NOURMAHAL is up, and trying
The wonders of her lute, whose strings—
Oh bliss!—now murmur like the sighing
From that ambrosial Spirit's wings!
And then, her voice—'tis more than human—
Never, till now, had it been given
To lips of any mortal woman
To utter notes so fresh from Heaven;
Sweet as the breath of angel sighs,
When angel sighs are most divine.—
“ Oh ! let it last till night,” she cries,
“ And he is more than ever mine. ”
And hourly she renews the lay,
So fearful lest its heavenly sweetness
Should, ere the evening, fade away,—
For things so heavenly have such fleetness!
But, far from fading, it but grows
Richer, diviner as it flows;
Till rapt she dwells on every string,
And pours again each sound along,
Like Echo, lost and languishing
In love with her own wondrous song.

That evening (trusting that his soul
Might be from haunting love released
By mirth, by music, and the bowl)
Th' Imperial SELIM held a Feast
In his magnificent Shalimar ;—
In whose Saloons, when the first star
Of evening o'er the waters trembled,
The Valley's loveliest all assembled ;
All the bright creatures that, like dreams,
Glide through its foliage, and drink beams
Of beauty from its founts and streams, *
And all those wandering minstrel-maids,
Who leave—how can they leave ?—the shades
Of that dear Valley, and are found
Singing in gardens of the South †
Those songs, that ne'er so sweetly sound
As from a young Cashmerian's mouth.

* “ The waters of Cachemir are the more renowned from its being supposed that the Cachemirians are indebted for their beauty to them.”—ALI YEZDI.

† “ From him I received the following little Gazzel, or Love Song, the notes of which he committed to paper from the voice of one of those singing girls of Cashmere, who wander from that delightful valley over the various parts of India.”—Persian Miscellanies.

There too the Haram's inmates smile ;—
 Maids from the West, with sun-bright hair,
 And from the Garden of the NILE,
 Delicate as the roses there ;— *
 Daughters of Love from CYPRUS' rocks,
 With Paphian diamonds in their locks ;— †
 Light Peri forms, such as there are
 On the gold meads of CANDAHAR ; §
 And they, before whose sleepy eyes,
 In their own bright Kathaian bowers,
 Sparkle such rainbow butterflies, **
 That they might fancy the rich flowers,

* “ The roses of the Jinan Nile, or Garden of the Nile (attached to the Emperor of Marocco's palace) are unequalled, and matrasses are made of their leaves for the men of rank to recline upon.”—JACKSON.

† “ On the side of a mountain near Paphos there is a cavern which produces the most beautiful rock crystal. On account of its brilliancy it has been called the Paphian diamond.”—MARITI.

§ “ There is a part of Candahar called Peria, or Fairy-Land.”—THEVENOT. In some of those countries to the North of India vegetable gold is supposed to be produced.

 “ These are the butterflies which are called in the Chinese language Flying Leaves. Some of them have such shining colours, and are so variegated, that they may be called flying flowers; and indeed they are always produced in the finest flower-gardens.”—DUNN.

That round them in the sun lay sighing,
Had been by magic all set flying!

Every thing young, every thing fair,
From East and West is blushing there:
Except—except—oh NOURMAHAL!
Thou loveliest, dearest of them all,
The one, whose smile shone out alone,
Amidst a world the only one!

Whose light, among so many lights,
Was like that star, on starry nights,
The seaman singles from the sky,
To steer his bark for ever by!

Thou wert not there—so SELIM thought,

And every thing seem'd drear without thee;
But ah! thou wert, thou wert—and brought

Thy charm of song all fresh about thee;
Mingling unnoticed with a band
Of lutanists from many a land,
And veil'd by such a mask as shades
The features of young Arab maids,—*

* “The Arabian women wear black masks with little clasps, prettily ordered.”—CARRERI. NIEBUHR mentions their showing but one eye in conversation.

A mask that leaves but one eye free,
 To do its best in witchery,—
 She roved, with beating heart, around,
 And waited, trembling, for the minute
 When she might try if still the sound
 Of her loved lute had magic in it.

The board was spread with fruits and wine ;
 With grapes of gold, like those that shine
 On CASBIN'S hills ; *—pomegranates full
 Of melting sweetness, and the pears
 And sunniest apples † that CAUBUL
 In all its thousand gardens § bears.
 Plantains, the golden and the green,
 MALAYA'S nectar'd mangusteen ; **
 Prunes of BOKARA, and sweet nuts
 From the far groves of SAMARCAND,

* “ The golden grapes of Casbin.”—Description of Persia.

† “ The fruits exported from Caubul are apples, pears, pomegranates,” etc.—ELPHINSTONE.

§ “ We sat down under a tree, listened to the birds, and talked with the son of our Mehmaundar about our country and Caubul, of which he gave an enchanting account: that city and its hundred thousand gardens,” etc.—Id.

 “ The Mangusteen, the most delicate fruit in the world ; he pride of the Malay Islands.”—MARSDEN.

And BASRA dates, and apricots,
 Seed of the Sun, * from IRAN's land ;—
 With rich conserve of Visna cherries, †
 Of orange flowers, and of those berries
 That, wild and fresh, the young gazelles
 Feed on in ERAC's rocky dells. §
 All these in richest vases smile,
 In baskets of pure santal-wood,
 And urns of porcelain from that isle **
 Sunk underneath the Indian flood,
 Whence oft the lucky diver brings
 Vases to grace the halls of kings.
 Wines too, of every clime and hue,
 Around their liquid lustre threw ;
 Amber Rosolli, ††—the bright dew

* “ A delicious kind of apricot, called by the Persians tokm-ek-shems, signifying sun's seed.”—Descript. of Persia.

† “ Sweetmeats in a crystal cup, consisting of rose-leaves in conserve, with lemon or Visna cherry, orange flowers,” etc.—RUSSELL.

§ “ Antelopes cropping the fresh berries of Erac.”—The Moallakat, poem of TARAFÄ.

 Mauri-ga-Sima, an island near Formosa, supposed to have been sunk in the sea for the crimes of its inhabitants. The vessels which the fishermen and divers bring up from it are sold at an immense price in China and Japan.—See KEMPFER.

†† Persian Tales.

From vineyards of the Green-Sea gushing ; *
And SHIRAZ wine, that richly ran
As if that jewel, large and rare,
The ruby, for which KUBLAI-KHAN
Offer'd a city's wealth, † was blushing
Melted within the goblets there !

And amply SELIM quaffs of each,
And seems resolved the floods shall reach
His inward heart,—shedding around
A genial deluge, as they run,
That soon shall leave no spot undrown'd,
For Love to rest his wings upon.

He little knew how well the boy
Can float upon a goblet's streams,
Lighting them with his smile of joy;—
As bards have seen him, in their dreams,
Down the blue GANGES laughing glide
Upon a rosy lotus wreath, §

* The white wine of Kishma.

† “ The King of Zeilan is said to have the very finest ruby that was ever seen. Kublai-Khan sent and offered the value of a city for it, but the King answered he would not give it for the treasure of the world.”—MARCO POLO.

§ “ The Indians feign that Cupid was first seen floating down the Ganges on the Nymphæa Nelumbo.”—See PENNANT.

Catching new lustre from the tide
That with his image shone beneath.

But what are cups, without the aid
Of song to speed them as they flow ?
And see—a lovely Georgian maid,
With all the bloom, the freshen'd glow
Of her own country maidens' looks,
When warm they rise from TEFLIS' brooks ; *
And with an eye, whose restless ray,
Full, floating, dark—oh he, who knows
His heart is weak, of Heaven should pray
To guard him from such eyes as those !—
With a voluptuous wildness flings
Her snowy hand across the strings
Of a syrinda, † and thus sings :—

Come hither, come hither—by night and by day,
We linger in pleasures that never are gone ;
Like the waves of the summer, as one dies away,
Another as sweet and as shining comes on.

* Teflis is celebrated for its natural warm baths.—See
EBN HAUKAL.

† “ The Indian Syrinda, or guitar.”—SYMES.

And the Love that is o'er, in expiring gives birth
 To a new one as warm, as unequall'd in bliss ;
 And oh ! if there be an Elysium on earth,
 It is this, it is this.

Here maidens are sighing, and fragrant their sigh
 As the flower of the Amra just oped by a bee ;*
 And precious their tears as that rain from the sky, †
 Which turns into pearls as it falls in the sea.
 Oh ! think what the kiss and the smile must be worth,

When the sigh and the tear are so perfect in bliss ;
 And own, if there be an Elysium on earth,
 It is this, it is this.

Here sparkles the nectar that, hallow'd by love,
 Could draw down those angels of old from their sphere,

Who for wine of this earth § left the fountains above,

* “ Delightful are the flowers of the Arma-trees on the mountain-tops, while the murmuring bees pursue their voluptuous toil.”—Song of Jayadeva.

† “ The Nisan, or drops of spring rain, which they believe to produce pearls if they fall into shells.”—RICHARDSON.

§ For an account of the share which wine had in the fall of the angels, see MARITI.

And forgot Heaven's stars for the eyes we have here.

And, bless'd with the odour our goblet gives forth,
What Spirit the sweets of his Eden would miss?
For oh ! if there be an Elysium on earth,
It is this, it is this.

The Georgian's song was scarcely mute,
When the same measure, sound for sound,
Was caught up by another lute,
And so divinely breathed around,
That all stood hush'd and wondering,
And turn'd and look'd into the air,
As if they thought to see the wing
Of ISRAFIL, * the Angel, there ;—
So powerfully on every soul
That new, enchanted measure stole.
While now a voice, sweet as the note
Of the charm'd lute, was heard to float
Along its chords, and so entwine
Its sound with theirs, that none knew whether
The voice or lute was most divine,
So wondrously they went together :—

* The Angel of Music.—See note, p. 269.

There's a bliss beyond all that the minstrel has told,

When two, that are link'd in one heavenly tie,
With heart never changing and brow never cold,
Love on through all ills, and love on till they die !

One hour of a passion so sacred is worth
Whole ages of heartless and wandering bliss ;
And oh ! if there be an Elysium on earth,
It is this, it is this.

'Twas not the air, 'twas not the words,
But that deep magic in the chords
And in the lips, that gave such power
As Music knew not till that hour.

At once a hundred voices said,
“ It is the mask'd Arabian maid ! ”
While SELIM, who had felt the strain
Deepest of any, and had lain
Some minutes rapt, as in a trance,
After the fairy sounds were o'er,
Too inly touch'd for utterance,
Now motion'd with his hand for more :—

Fly to the desert, fly with me,
Our Arab tents are rude for thee ;
But oh ! the choice what heart can doubt
Of tents with love, or thrones without ?

Our rocks are rough, but smiling there
Th' acacia waves her yellow hair,
Lonely and sweet, nor loved the less
For flowering in a wilderness.

Our sands are bare, but down their slope
The silvery-footed antelope
As gracefully and gaily springs
As o'er the marble courts of Kings.

Then come—thy Arab maid will be
The loved and lone acacia-tree,
The antelope, whose feet shall bless
With their light sound thy loneliness.

Oh ! there are looks and tones that dart
An instant sunshine through the heart,—
As if the soul that minute caught
Some treasure it through life had sought ;

As if the very lips and eyes
Predestined to have all our sighs,
And never be forgot again,
Sparkled and spoke before us then !

So came thy every glance and tone,
When first on me they breathed and shone ;
New, as if brought from other spheres,
Yet welcome as if loved for years !

Then fly with me,—if thou hast known
No other flame, nor falsely thrown
A gem away, that thou hadst sworn
Should ever in thy heart be worn.

Come, if the love thou hast for me
Is pure and fresh as mine for thee,—
Fresh as the fountain under ground
When first 'tis by the lapwing found. *

But if for me thou dost forsake
Some other maid, and rudely break
Her worshipp'd image from its base,
To give to me the ruin'd place ;—

* The Hudhud, or Lapwing, is supposed to have the power of discovering water under ground.

Then, fare thee well—I'd rather make
My bower upon some icy lake
When thawing suns begin to shine,
Than trust to love so false as thine!

There was a pathos in this lay,
That, even without enchantment's art,
Would instantly have found its way
Deep into SELIM's burning heart;
But breathing, as it did, a tone
To earthly lutes and lips unknown,
With every chord fresh from the touch
Of Music's Spirit,—'twas too much!
Starting, he dash'd away the cup,—
Which, all the time of this sweet air,
His hand had held, untasted, up,
As if 'twere fix'd by magic there,—
And naming her, so long unnamed,
So long unseen, wildly exclaim'd,
“ Oh, NOURMAHAL! oh, NOURMAHAL!
“ Hadst thou but sung this witching strain,
“ I could forget—forgive thee all,
“ And never leave those eyes again.”

The mask is off—the charm is wrought—
And SELIM to his heart has caught,
In blushes, more than ever bright,
His NOURMAHAL, his Haram's Light !
And well do vanish'd frowns enhance
The charm of every brighten'd glance ;
And dearer seems each dawning smile
For having lost its light awhile ;
And, happier now for all her sighs,
As on his arm her head reposes,
She whispers him, with laughing eyes,
“ Remember, love, the Feast of Roses ! ”

FADLADEEN, at the conclusion of this light rhapsody, took occasion to sum up his opinion of the young Cashmerian's poetry,—of which, he trusted, they had that evening heard the last. Having recapitulated the epithets, “frivolous”—“inharmonious”—“nonsensical,” he proceeded to say that, viewing it in the most favourable light, it resembled one of those Maldivian boats, to which the Princess had alluded in the relation of her dream,*—a slight, gilded thing, sent adrift without rudder or ballast, and with nothing but vapid sweets and faded flowers on board. The profusion, indeed, of flowers and birds, which this poet had ready on all occasions—not to mention dews, gems, etc.—was a most oppressive kind of opulence to his hearers; and had the unlucky effect of giving to his style all the glitter of the flower-garden without its method, and all the flutter of the aviary without its song. In addition to this, he chose his subjects badly, and was always most inspired by the worst parts of them. The charms of paganism, the merits of rebellion,—these were the themes honoured with his particular enthusiasm; and, in the poem just recited, one of his most palatable passages was in praise of that beverage of the Unfaithful, wine; “being, perhaps,” said he, relaxing into a smile, as conscious of his own character in the Haram on this point, “one of those bards whose fancy owes all its illumination to the grape, like that painted porcelain, so curious and so rare, whose images are only visible when liquor is poured into it.” Upon the whole, it was his opinion, from the specimens which they had heard, and which, he begged to say, were the most tiresome part of the journey, that—whatever other merits this well-dressed young gentleman might possess—poetry was by no means his proper avocation: “and indeed,” concluded the critic, “from his fondness for flowers and for birds, I would venture to suggest that a florist or a bird-catcher is a much more suitable calling for him than a poet.”

* See page 225.

They had now begun to ascend those barren mountains, which separate Cashmere from the rest of India; and, as the heats were intolerable, and the time of their encampments limited to the few hours necessary for refreshment and repose, there was an end to all their delightful evenings, and LALLA ROOKH saw no more of FERAMORZ. She now felt that her short dream of happiness was over, and that she had nothing but the recollection of its few blissful hours, like the one draught of sweet water that serves the camel across the wilderness, to be her heart's refreshment during the dreary waste of life that was before her. The blight that had fallen upon her spirits soon found its way to her cheek, and her ladies saw with regret—though not without some suspicion of the cause—that the beauty of their mistress, of which they were almost as proud as of their own, was fast vanishing away at the very moment of all when she had most need of it. What must the King of Bucharia feel, when, instead of the lively and beautiful LALLA ROOKH, whom the poets of Delhi had described as more perfect than the divinest images in the House of Azor, he should receive a pale and inanimate victim, upon whose cheek neither health nor pleasure bloomed, and from whose eyes Love had fled,—to hide himself in her heart!

If any thing could have charmed away the melancholy of her spirits, it would have been the fresh airs and enchanting scenery of that Valley, which the Persians so justly called the Unequalled.* But neither the coolness of its atmosphere, so luxurious after toiling up those bare and burning mountains—neither the splendour of the minarets and pagodas, that shone out from the depth of its woods, nor the grottos, hermitages, and miraculous fountains, which make every spot of that region holy ground;—neither the countless water-falls, that rush into the Valley from all those high and romantic mountains that encircle it, nor the fair city on the Lake, whose houses, roofed with flowers, appeared at a distance like one vast and variegated parterre;—not all these wonders and glories of the most lovely country under the sun could steal her heart for a minute from those sad thoughts, which

* Kachmire be Nazeer.—FORSTER.

but darkened and grew bitterer every step she advanced.

The gay pomps and processions that met her upon her entrance into the Valley, and the magnificence with which the roads all along were decorated, did honour to the taste and gallantry of the young King. It was night when they approached the city, and, for the last two miles, they had passed under arches, thrown from hedge to hedge, festooned with only those rarest roses from which the Attar Gul, more precious than gold, is distilled, and illuminated in rich and fanciful forms with lanterns of the triple-coloured tortoise-shell of Pegu. Sometimes, from a dark wood by the side of the road, a display of fireworks would break out, so sudden and so brilliant, that a Bramin might think he saw that grove, in whose purple shade the God of Battles was born, bursting into a flame at the moment of his birth.—While, at other times, a quick and playful irradiation continued to brighten all the fields and gardens by which they passed, forming a line of dancing lights along the horizon; like the meteors of the north as they are seen by those hunters, who pursue the white and blue foxes on the confines of the Icy Sea.

These arches and fire-works delighted the ladies of the Princess exceedingly ; and, with their usual good logic, they deduced from his taste for illuminations, that the King of Bucharria would make the most exemplary husband imaginable. Nor, indeed, could LALLA ROOKH herself help feeling the kindness and splendour with which the young bridegroom welcomed her ;—but she also felt how painful is the gratitude, which kindness from those we cannot love excites ; and that their best blandishments come over the heart with all that chilling and deadly sweetness, which we can fancy in the cold, odoriferous wind that is to blow over this earth in the last days.

The marriage was fixed for the morning after her arrival, when she was, for the first time, to be presented to the monarch in that Imperial Palace beyond the lake, called the Shalimar. Though a night of more wakeful and anxious thought had never been passed in the Happy Valley before, yet when she rose in the morning and her ladies came round her, to assist in the adjustment of the bridal ornaments, they thought they had never seen her look half so beautiful. What she had lost of the bloom and radiancy of her charms was more than made up by that intellectual expression, that soul in the eyes which is worth all the rest of loveliness. When they had tinged her fingers with the Henna leaf, and placed upon her brow a small coronet of jewels, of the shape worn by the ancient Queens of Bucharria, they flung over her head the rose-coloured bridal veil, and she proceeded to the barge that was to convey her across the lake;—first kissing, with a mournful look, the little amulet of cornelian which her father had hung about her neck at parting.

The morning was as fair as the maid upon whose nuptials it rose, and the shining lake, all covered with boats, the minstrels playing upon the shores of the islands, and the crowded summer-houses on the green hills around, with shawls and banners waving from their roofs, presented such a picture of animated rejoicing, as only she, who was the object of it all, did not feel with transport. To LALLA ROOKH alone it was a melancholy pageant ; nor could she have even borne to look upon the scene, were it not for a hope that, among the crowds around, she might once more perhaps catch a glimpse of FERAMORZ. So much was her imagination haunted by this thought, that there was scarcely an islet or boat she passed, at which her heart did not flutter with a momentary fancy that he was there. Happy, in her eyes, the humblest slave upon whom the light of his dear looks fell !—In the barge immediately after the Princess was FADLADEEN, with his silken curtains thrown widely apart, that all might have the benefit of his august presence, and with his head full of the speech he was to deliver to the King, “ concerning FERAMORZ, and literature, and the Chabuk, as connected therewith. ”

They had now entered the canal which leads from the lake to the splendid domes and saloons of the Shalimar, and glided on through gardens ascending from each bank, full of flowering shrubs that made the air all perfume ; while from the middle of the canal rose jets of water, smooth and unbroken, to such a dazzling height, that they stood like pillars of diamond in the sunshine. After sailing under the arches of various saloons, they at length arrived at the last and most magnificent, where the monarch awaited the coming of his bride ; and such was the agitation of her heart and frame, that it was with difficulty she walked up the marble steps, which were covered with cloth of gold for her ascent from the barge. At the end of the hall stood two thrones, as precious as the Cerulean Throne of Koolburga, on one of which sat ALIRIS, the youthful King of Bucharia, and on the other was, in a few minutes, to be placed the most beautiful Princess in the world.—Immediately upon the entrance of LALLA ROOKH into the saloon, the monarch descended from his throne to meet her ; but, scarcely had he time to take her hand in his, when she screamed with surprise and fainted at his feet. It was FERAMORZ himself that stood before her !—FERAMORZ was, himself, the Sovereign of Bucharia, who in this disguise had accompanied his young bride from Delhi, and, having won her love as an humble minstrel, now amply deserved to enjoy it as a King.

The consternation of FADLADEEN at this discovery was, for the moment, almost pitiable. But change of opinion is a resource too convenient in courts for this experienced courtier not to have learned to avail himself of it. His criticisms were all, of course, recanted instantly; he was seized with an admiration of the King's verses, as unbounded as, he begged him to believe, it was disinterested; and the following week saw him in possession of an additional place, swearing by all the Saints of Islam that never had there existed so great a poet as the Monarch, ALIRIS, and ready to prescribe his favourite regimen of the Chabuk for every man, woman, and child that dared to think otherwise.

Of the happiness of the King and Queen of Bucharia, after such a beginning, there can be but little doubt; and, among the lesser symptoms, it is recorded of LALLA ROOKH, that, to the day of her death, in memory of their delightful journey, she never called the King by any other name than FERAMORZ.

NOTES.

The number of persons who were present at the funeral was very large. The funeral was held at the cathedral in London.
The coffin was placed in the chapel and the service was conducted by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The coffin was carried to the tomb by the bearers. The service was very solemn and the people
were very much affected.
The funeral was a great
event and was attended by many of the nobles and
clergy of the country.

The funeral of the King and Queen was held at the cathedral in London. The coffin was placed in the chapel and the service was conducted by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The coffin was carried to the tomb by the
bearers. The service was very solemn and the people
were very much affected.
The funeral was a great
event and was attended by many of the nobles and clergy of the country.

NOTES.

PAGE 5.

THESE particulars of the visit of the King of Bucharia to Aurungzebe are found in Dow's History of Hindostan, vol. iii. p. 392.

PAGE 6.

Leila.

The mistress of Mejnoun, upon whose story so many Romances, in all the languages of the East, are founded.

PAGE 6.

Shirine.

For the loves of this celebrated beauty with Khosrou and with Ferhad, see D'HERBELOT, GIBBON, Oriental Collections, etc.

PAGE 6.

Dewildé.

“The history of the loves of Dewildé and Chizer, the son of the Emperor Alla, is written in an elegant poem, by the noble Chusero.”—FERISHTA.

PAGE 7.

Those insignia of the Emperor's favour, etc.

“One mark of honour or knighthood bestowed by the Emperor is the permission to wear a small kettle-drum at the bows of their saddles, which at first was invented for the training of hawks, and to call them to the lure, and is worn in the field by all sportsmen to that end."—FRYER'S Travels.

"Those on whom the King has conferred the privilege must wear an ornament of jewels on the right side of the turban, surmounted by a high plume of the feathers of a kind of egret. This bird is found only in Cashmeer, and the feathers are carefully collected for the King, who bestows them on his nobles."—ELPHINSTONE'S Account of Caubul.

PAGE 7.

Kedar Khan, etc.

"Khedar Khan, the Khakan, or King of Turquestan beyond the Gihon (at the end of the eleventh century) whenever he appeared abroad was preceded by seven hundred horsemen with silver battle-axes, and was followed by an equal number bearing maces of gold. He was a great patron of poetry, and it was he who used to preside at public exercises of genius, with four basins of gold and silver by him to distribute among the poets who excelled."—RICHARDSON'S Dissertation prefixed to his Dictionary.

PAGE 7.

The gilt pine-apples, etc.

"The kubdeh, a large golden knob, generally in the shape of a pine-apple, on the top of the canopy over the litter or palanquin."—SCOTT'S Notes on the Bahar-danush.

PAGE 7.

The rose-coloured veils of the Princess's litter.

In the poem of Zohair, in the Moallakat, there is the following lively description of “a company of maidens seated on camels :—”

“ They are mounted in carriages covered with costly awnings, and with rose-coloured veils, the linings of which have the hue of crimson Andem-wood.

“ When they ascend from the bosom of the vale, they sit forward on the saddle-cloths, with every mark of a voluptuous gaiety.

“ Now, when they have reached the brink of yon blue gushing rivulet, they fix the poles of their tents like the Arab with a settled mansion.”

PAGE 8.

A young female slave sat fanning her, etc.

See Bernier's description of the attendants on Rauchanara-Begum in her progress to Cashmere.

PAGE 8.

Religion, of which Aurungzebe was a munificent protector.

This hypocritical Emperor would have made a worthy associate of certain Holy Leagues.—“ He held the cloak of religion (says Dow) between his actions and the vulgar ; and impiously thanked the Divinity for a success which he owed to his own wickedness. When he was murdering and persecuting his brothers and their families, he was building a magnificent mosque at Delhi, as an offering to God for his assistance to him in the civil wars. He acted as high-priest at the consecration of this temple ; and made a practice of attending divine service there, in the humble dress of a Fakeer. But when he lifted one hand to the Divinity, he, with the other, signed warrants for the assassination of his relations."—History of Hindostan, vol. iii. p. 335. See also the curious letter of Aurungzebe, given in the Oriental Collections, vol. i. p. 320.

PAGE 9.

The diamond eyes of the idol, etc.

"The Idol at Jaghernat has two fine diamonds for eyes. No goldsmith is suffered to enter the Pagoda, one having stole one of these eyes, being locked up all night with the Idol."—Tavernier.

PAGE 9.

Gardens of Shalimar.

See a description of these royal Gardens in "An Account of the present State of Delhi, by Lieut. W. Franklin."—Asiat. Research. vol. iv. p. 417.

PAGE 9.

Lake of Pearl.

"In the neighbourhood is Notte Gill, or the Lake of Pearl, which receives this name from its pellucid water."—Pennant's Hindoostan.

"Nasir Jung, encamped in the vicinity of the Lake of Tonoor, amused himself with sailing on that clear and beautiful water, and gave it the fanciful name of Motee Talab, 'the Lake of Pearls,' which it still retains."—Wilks's South of India.

PAGE 9.

Described by one from the Isles of the West, etc.

Sir Thomas Roe, Ambassador from James I. to Jehanguire.

PAGE 10.

Loves of Wamak and Ezra.

“The romance Wemakweazra, written in Persian verse, which contains the loves of Wamak and Ezra, two celebrated lovers, who lived before the time of Mahomet.”—Note on the Oriental Tales.

PAGE 10.

Of the fair-haired Zal, and his mistress, Rodahver.

Their amour is recounted in the Shah-Namêh of Ferdousi; and there is much beauty in the passage which describes the slaves of Rodahver, sitting on the bank of the river and throwing flowers into the stream, in order to draw the attention of the young Hero who is encamped on the opposite side.—See CHAMPION'S Translation.

PAGE 10.

The combat of Rustam with the terrible White Demon.

Rustam is the Hercules of the Persians. For the particulars of his victory over the Sepeed Deeve, or White Demon, see Oriental Collections, vol. ii. p. 45.—Near the city of Shirauz is an immense quadrangular monument in commemoration of this combat, called the Kelaat-i-Deev Sepeed, or Castle of the White Giant, which Father Angelo, in his Gazophylacium Persicum, p. 127, declares to have been the most memorable monument of antiquity which he had seen in Persia.—See OUSELEY'S Persian Miscellanies.

PAGE 10.

Their golden anklets.

“The women of the Idol, or dancing girls of the Pagoda, have little golden bells fastened to their feet, the soft, harmonious tinkling of which vibrates in unison with the exquisite melody of their voices."

—MAURICE'S Indian Antiquities.

"The Arabian courtesans, like the Indian women, have little golden bells fastened round their legs, neck and elbows, to the sound of which they dance before the King. The Arabian princesses wear golden rings on their fingers, to which little bells are suspended, as in the flowing tresses of their hair, that their superior rank may be known, and they themselves receive in passing the homage due to them."—See CALMET'S Dictionary, art. Bells.

PAGE 11.

That delicious opium, etc.

"Abou-Tige, ville de la Thébaïde, où il croît beaucoup de pavots noirs, dont se fait le meilleur opium."—D'HERBELOT.

PAGE 11.

That idol of women, Crishna.

"He and the three Rámas are described as youths of perfect beauty; and the Princesses of Hindustán were all passionately in love with Crishna, who continues to this hour the darling God of the Indian women."—SIR W. JONES, on the Gods of Greece, Italy, and India.

PAGE 12.

The shawl-goat of Tibet.

See TURNER'S Embassy for a description of this animal, "the most beautiful among the whole tribe of goats." The material for the shawls (which is carried to Cashmere) is found next the skin.

PAGE 12.

The veiled Prophet of Khorassan.

For the real history of this Impostor, whose original name was Hakem ben Haschem, and who was called Mocanna from the veil of silver gauze (or, as others say, golden) which he always wore, see D'HERBELOT.

PAGE 13.

Flowrets and fruits blush over every stream.

"The fruits of Meru are finer than those of any other place; and one cannot see in any other city such palaces, with groves, and streams, and gardens."
—EBN HAUKAL'S Geography.

PAGE 13.

*For, far less luminous, his votaries said,
Were even the gleams, miraculously shed
O'er Moussa's cheek.*

"Ses disciples assuraient qu'il se couvrait le visage, pour ne pas éblouir ceux qui l'approchaient par l'éclat de son visage comme Moyse."—D'HERBELOT.

PAGE 14.

In hatred to the Caliph's hue of night.

"Il faut remarquer ici, touchant les habits blancs des disciples de Hakem, que la couleur des habits, des coiffures et des étendards des Khalifes Abassides étant la noire, ce chef de Rebelles ne pouvait pas en choisir une qui lui fût plus opposée."—D'HERBELOT.

PAGE 14.

Javelins of the light Kathaian reed.

“ Our dark javelins, exquisitely wrought of Kathaian reeds, slender and delicate.”—Poem of Amru.

PAGE 14.

Fill'd with the stems that bloom on Iran's rivers.

The Persians call this plant Gaz. The celebrated shaft of Isfendiar, one of their ancient heroes, was made of it.—“ Nothing can be more beautiful than the appearance of this plant in flower during the rains on the banks of rivers, where it is usually interwoven with a lovely twining asclepias.”—SIR W. JONES, Botanical Observations on Select Indian Plants.

PAGE 15.

Like a chenar-tree grove.

The oriental plane. “ The chenar is a delightful tree ; its bole is of a fine white and smooth bark ; and its foliage, which grows in a tuft at the summit, is of a bright green.”—MORIER'S Travels.

PAGE 16.

*With turban'd heads, of every hue and race,
Bowling before that veil'd and awful face,
Like tulip-beds.*

“ The name of tulip is said to be of Turkish extraction, and given to the flower on account of its resembling a turban.”—BECKMAN'S History of Inventions.

PAGE 17.

*With belt of broider'd crape,
And fur-bound bonnet of Bucharian shape.*

“ The inhabitants of Bucharina wear a round cloth bonnet, shaped much after the Polish fashion, having a large fur border. They tie their kaftans about the middle with a girdle of a kind of silk crape, several times round the body.—Account of Independent Tartary, in PINKERTON'S Collection.

PAGE 19.

*Waved, like the wings of the white birds that fan
The flying throne of star-taught Soliman.*

This wonderful throne was called the Star of the Genii. For a full description of it, see the Fragment, translated by CAPTAIN FRANKLIN, from a Persian MS. entitled "The History of Jerusalem:" Oriental Collections, vol. i. p. 335.—When Solomon travelled, the eastern writers say, "he had a carpet of green silk on which his throne was placed, being of a prodigious length and breadth, and sufficient for all his forces to stand upon, the men placing themselves on his right hand and the spirits on his left; and that, when all were in order, the wind, at his command, took up the carpet, and transported it, with all that were upon it, wherever he pleased; the army of birds at the same time flying over their heads, and forming a kind of canopy to shade them from the sun."—SALE'S Koran, vol. ii. p. 214. note.

PAGE 20.

*And, thence descending, flow'd
Through many a Prophet's breast.*

This is according to D'Herbelot's account of the doctrines of Mokanna:—"Sa doctrine était que Dieu avait pris une forme et figure humaine depuis qu'il eut com-mandé aux Anges d'adorer Adam, le premier des hommes. Qu'après la mort d'Adam, Dieu était apparu sous la figure de plusieurs Prophètes et autres grands hommes qu'il avait choisis, jusqu'à ce qu'il prît celle d'Abu Moslem, Prince de Khorassan, lequel professait l'erreur de la Tenassukhiah ou Métempsychose ; et qu'après la mort de ce Prince, la Divinité était passée, et descendue en sa personne."

PAGE 37.

*Such Gods as he
Whom India serves, the monkey Deity.*

"Apes are in many parts of India highly venerated, out of respect to the God of Hannaman, a deity partaking of the form of that race."—PENNANT'S Hindoostan.

See a curious account in STEPHEN'S Persia of a solemn embassy from some part of the Indies to Goa, when the Portuguese were there, offering vast treasures for the recovery of a monkey's tooth, which they held in great veneration, and which had been taken away upon the conquest of the kingdom of Jafanapatan.

PAGE 37.

— *Proud things of clay,
To whom if Lucifer, as grandams say,
Refused, though at the forfeit of Heaven's light,
To bend in worship, Lucifer was right.*

This resolution of Eblis not to acknowledge the new creature, man, was, according to Mahometan tradition, thus adopted :—"The earth (which God had selected for the materials of his work) was carried into Arabia, to a place between Mecca and Tayef, where, being first kneaded by the Angels, it was afterwards fashioned by God himself into a human form, and left to dry for the space of forty days, or, as others say, as many years; the angels in the mean time, often visiting it, and Eblis (then one of the angels nearest to God's presence, afterwards the devil) among the rest; but he, not contented with looking at it, kicked it with his foot till it rung, and knowing God designed that creature to be his superior, took a secret resolution never to acknowledge him as such."—SALE on the Koran.

PAGE 39.

*Where none but priests are privileged to trade
In that best marble of which Gods are made.*

The material of which images of Gaudma (the Birman Deity) is made, is held sacred. "Birmans may not purchase the marble in mass, but are suffered, and indeed encouraged, to buy figures of the Deity ready made."—SYMES'S Ava, vol. ii. p. 376.

PAGE 47.

*The puny bird that dares, with teasing hum,
Within the crocodile's stretch'd jaws to come.*

The humming-bird is said to run this risk for the purpose of picking the crocodile's teeth. The same circumstance is related of the lapwing, as a fact to which he was witness, by PAUL LUCAS, Voyage fait en 1714.

PAGE 51.

Some artists of Yamtcheou having been sent on previously.

"The Feast of Lanterns is celebrated at Yamtcheou with more magnificence than any where else ; and the report goes, that the illuminations there are so splendid, that an Emperor once, not daring openly to leave his court to go thither, committed himself, with the Queen and several Princesses of his family, into the hands of a magician, who promised to transport them thither in a trice. He made them in the night to ascend magnificent thrones that were borne up by swans, which in a moment arrived at Yamtcheou. The Emperor saw at his leisure all the solemnity, being carried upon a cloud that hovered over the city, and descended by degrees ; and came back again with the same speed and equipage, nobody at court perceiving his absence.” —The present State of China, p. 156.

PAGE 51.

Artificial sceneries of bamboo-work.

See a description of the nuptials of Vizier Alee in the Asiatic Annual Register of 1804.

PAGE 52.

The origin of these fantastic Chinese illuminations.

“ The vulgar ascribe it to an accident that happened in the family of a famous mandarin, whose daughter, walking one evening upon the shore of a lake, fell in and was drowned ; this afflicted father, with his family, ran thither, and, the better to find her, he caused a great company of lanterns to be lighted. All the inhabitants of the place thronged after him with torches. The year ensuing they made fires upon the shores the same day ; they continued the ceremony every year, every one lighted his lantern, and by degrees it commenced into a custom."—Present State of China.

PAGE 54.

The Kohol's jetty dye.

"None of these ladies," says SHAW, "take themselves to be completely dressed, till they have tinged the hair and edges of their eye-lids with the powder of lead-ore. Now, as this operation is performed by dipping first into the powder a small wooden bodkin of the thickness of a quill, and then drawing it afterwards, through the eye-lids over the ball of the eye, we shall have a lively image of what the prophet (Jer. iv. 30.) may be supposed to mean by rending the eyes with painting. This practice is, no doubt, of great antiquity; for, besides the instance already taken notice of, we find that where Jezebel is said (2 Kings, ix. 30.) to have painted her face, the original words are, she adjusted her eyes with the powder of lead ore."—SHAW'S Travels.

PAGE 58.

——— Drop

About the gardens, drunk with that sweet food.

TAVERNIER adds, that while the Birds of Paradise lie in this intoxicated state, the emmets come and eat off their legs; and that hence it is they are said to have no feet.

PAGE 63.

As they were captives to the King of Flowers.

"They deferred it till the King of Flowers should ascend his throne of enamelled foliage.—The Bahar-danush.

PAGE 64.

But a light, golden chain-work round her hair, etc.

“ One of the head-dresses of the Persian women is composed of a light golden chain-work, set with small pearls, with a thin gold plate pendant, about the bigness of a crown-piece, on which is impressed an Arabian prayer, and which hangs upon the cheek, below the ear.”—HANWAY’S Travels.

PAGE 64.

The maids of Yezd.

“ Certainly the women of Yezd are the handsomest women in Persia. The proverb is, that to live happy a man must have a wife of Yezd, eat the bread of Yezdecas, and drink the wine of Shiraz.”—TAVERNIER.

PAGE 69.

*And his floating eyes—oh! they resemble
Blue water-lilies.*

“ Whose wanton eyes resemble blue water-lilies, agitated by the breeze.”—JAYADEVA.

PAGE 70.

To muse upon the pictures that hung round.

It has been generally supposed that the Mahometans prohibit all pictures of animals; but TORDERINI shows that, though the practice is forbidden by the Koran, they are not more averse to painted figures and images than other people. From Mr. Murphy’s work, too, we find that the Arabs of Spain had no objection to the introduction of figures into painting.

PAGE 71.

*Like her own radiant planet of the west,
Whose orb when half retired looks loveliest!*

This is not quite astronomically true. “Dr. Hadley (says KEIL) has shewn that Venus is brightest when she is about forty degrees removed from the sun; and that then but only a fourth part of her lucid disk is to be seen from the earth.”

PAGE 71.

*With her from Saba's bowers, in whose bright eyes
He read, that to be bless'd is to be wise.*

“In the palace which Solomon ordered to be built against the arrival of the Queen of Saba, the floor or pavement was of transparent glass, laid over running water in which fish were swimming.” This led the Queen into a very natural mistake, which the Koran has not thought beneath its dignity to commemorate. “It was said unto her, Enter the palace. And when she saw it she imagined it to be a great water; and she discovered her legs, by lifting up her robe to pass through it, Whereupon, Solomon said to her, Verily, this is the place evenly floored with glass.”—Chap. 27.

PAGE 71.

Zuleika.

“Such was the name of Potiphar's wife, according to the sura, or chapter of the Alcoran, which contains the history of Joseph, and which for elegance of style surpasses every other of the Prophet's books; some Arabian writers also call her Rail. The passion which this frail beauty of antiquity conceived for her young Hebrew slave has given rise to a much esteemed poem in the Persian language, entitled Yusef vau Zelikha, by NOUREDDIN JAMI; the manuscript copy of which, in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, is supposed to be the finest in the whole world."—Note upon NOTT's Translation of Hafez.

PAGE 85.

The apples of Istkahar.

"In the territory of Istkahar there is a kind of apple, half of which is sweet and half sour."—EBN HAUKAL.

PAGE 85.

They saw a young Hindoo girl upon the bank.

For an account of this ceremony, see GRANDPRÉ'S Voyage in the Indian Ocean.

PAGE 86.

The Oton-tala or Sea of Stars.

"The place where the Whangho, a river of Tibet, rises, and where there are more than a hundred springs, which sparkle like stars; whence it is called Hotun-nor, that is, the Sea of Stars."—Description of Tibet in PINKERTON.

PAGE 88.

*This City of War, which, in a few short hours,
Hath sprung up here.*

"The Lescar, or Imperial Camp, is divided, like a regular town, into squares, alleys, and streets, and from a rising ground furnishes one of the most agreeable prospects in the world. Starting up in a few hours in an uninhabited plain, it raises the idea of a city built by enchantment. Even those who leave their houses in cities to follow the prince in his progress are frequently so charmed with the Lescar, when situated in a beautiful and convenient place, that they cannot prevail with themselves to remove. To prevent this inconvenience to the court, the Emperor, after sufficient time is allowed to the tradesmen to follow, orders them to be burnt out of their tents."—Dow's Hindustan.

Colonel WILKS gives a lively picture of an Eastern encampment.—“His camp, like that of most Indian armies, exhibited a motley collection of covers from the scorching sun and dews of the night, variegated according to the taste or means of each individual, by extensive inclosures of coloured calico surrounding superb suites of tents; by ragged cloths or blankets stretched over sticks or branches; palm-leaves hastily spread over similar supports; handsome tents and splendid canopies; horses, oxen, elephants, and camels; all intermixed without any exterior mark of order or design, except the flags of the chiefs, which usually mark the centres of a congeries of these masses; the only regular part of the encampment being the streets of shops, each of which is constructed nearly in the manner of a booth at an English fair.”—Historical Sketches of the South of India.

PAGE 88.

And camels, tufted o'er with Yemen's shells.

“A superb camel, ornamented with strings and tufts of small shells.”—ALI BEY.

PAGE 89.

*The tinkling throngs
Of laden camels, and their drivers' songs.*

“Some of the camels have bells about their necks, and some about their legs, like those which our carriers put about their fore-horses' necks, which, together with the servants (who belong to the camels, and travel on foot) singing all night, make a pleasant noise, and the journey passes away delightfully.”—PITT'S Account of the Mahometans.

“The camel-driver follows the camels singing, and sometimes playing upon his pipe; the louder he sings and pipes, the faster the camels go. Nay, they will stand still when he gives over his music.”—TAVERNIER.

PAGE 94.

*Hot as that crimson haze
By which the prostrate caravan is awed.*

SAVARY says of the south wind, which blows in Egypt from February to May, “Sometimes it appears only in the shape of an impetuous whirlwind, which passes rapidly, and is fatal to the traveller surprised in the middle of the deserts. Torrents of burning sand roll before it, the firmament is enveloped in a thick veil, and the sun appears of the colour of blood. Sometimes whole caravans are buried in it.”

PAGE 103.

—*The pillar'd throne
Of Parviz.*

“There were said to be under this Throne or Palace of Khosrou Parviz a hundred vaults filled with “treasures so immense, that some Mahometan writers tell us, their Prophet, to encourage his disciples, carried them to a rock, which at his command opened, and gave them a prospect through it of the treasures of Khosrou.”—Universal History.

PAGE 103.

*And they beheld an orb, ample and bright,
Rise from the Holy Well.*

We are not told more of this trick of the Impostor, than that it was “une machine, qu’il disoit être la Lune.” According to Richardson, the miracle is perpetuated in Nekscheb.—“Nakshab, the name of a city in Transoxiana, where they say there is a well, in which the appearance of the moon is to be seen night and day.”

PAGE 105.

On for the lamps that light yon lofty screen.

The tents of Princes were generally illuminated. Norden tells us that the tent of the Bey of Girge was distinguished from the other tents by forty lanterns being suspended before it.—See HARMER’S Observations on Job.

PAGE 109.

Engines of havoc in, unknown before.

That they knew the secret of the Greek fire among the Mussulmans early in the eleventh century appears from Dow's Account of Mamood I. "When he arrived at Moulton, finding that the country of the Jits was defended by great rivers, he ordered fifteen hundred boats to be built, each of which he armed with six iron spikes, projecting from their prows and sides, to prevent their being boarded by the enemy, who were very expert in that kind of war. When he had launched this fleet, he ordered twenty archers into each boat, and five others with fire-balls, to burn the craft of the Jits, and naptha to set the whole river on fire."

The agnee aster, too, in Indian poems, the Instrument of Fire, whose flame cannot be extinguished, is supposed to signify the Greek Fire.—See WILKS'S South of India, vol. i. p. 471.—And in the curious Javan poem, the Brata Yudha, given by Mr. RAFFLES in his History of Java, we find, "He aimed at the Heart of Soéta with the sharp-pointed Weapon of Fire."

The mention of gunpowder as in use among the Arabians, long before its supposed discovery in Europe, is introduced by EBN FADHL, the Egyptian geographer, who lived in the thirteenth century. "Bodies," he says, "in the form of scorpions, bouud round and filled with nitrous powder, glide along, making a gentle noise; then, exploding, they lighten, as it were, and burn. But there are others which, cast into the air, stretch along like a cloud, roaring horribly, as thunder roars, and on all sides vomiting out flames, burst, burn, and reduce to cinders, whatever comes in their way." The historian BEN ABDALLA, in speaking of the sieges of Abulualid in the year of the Hegira 712, says, "A fiery globe, by means of combustible matter, with a mighty noise suddenly emitted, strikes with the force of lightning, and shakes the citadel."—See the extracts from CASIRI'S Biblioth. Arab. Hispan. in the Appendix to BERINGTON'S Literary History of the Middle Ages.

PAGE 109.

Discharge, as from a kindled naptha fount.

See HANWAY'S Account of the Springs of Naptha at Baku (which is called by Lieutenant Pottinger Joala Mookhee, or the Flaming Mouth), taking fire and running into the sea. Dr. COOKE, in his Journal, mentions some wells in Circassia, strongly impregnated with this inflammable oil, from which issues boiling water. "Though the weather," he adds, "was now very cold, the warmth of these wells of hot water produced near them the verdure and flowers of spring."

Major SCOTT WARING says that naptha is used by the Persians, as we are told it was in hell, for lamps.

Many a row

Of starry lamps and blazing cressets, fed
With naptha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky.

PAGE 117.

*Thou seest yon cistern in the shade—'tis fill'd
With burning drugs, for this last hour distill'd.*

"Il donna du poison dans le vin à tous ses gens, et se jeta lui-même ensuite dans une cuve pleine de drogues brûlantes et consumantes, afin qu'il ne restât rien de tous les membres de son corps, et que ceux qui restaient de sa secte pussent croire qu'il était monté au ciel, ce qui ne manqua pas d'arriver."—D'HERBELOT.

PAGE 125.

To eat any mangoes but those of Mazagong was, of course, impossible.

“The celebrity of Mazagong is owing to its mangoes, which are certainly the best fruit I ever tasted. The parent tree, from which all those of this species have been grafted, is honoured during the fruit season by a guard of sepoy; and, in the reign of Shah Jehan, couriers were stationed between Delhi and the Mahratta coast, to secure an abundant and fresh supply of mangoes for the royal table.”—Mrs. GRAHAM'S Journal of a Residence in India.

PAGE 125.

His fine antique porcelain.

This old porcelain is found in digging, and “if it is esteemed, it is not because it has acquired any new degree of beauty in the earth, but because it has retained its ancient beauty; and this alone is of great importance in China, where they give large sums for the smallest vessels which were used under the Emperors Yan and Chun, who reigned many ages before the dynasty of Tang, at which time porcelain began to be used by the Emperors” (about the year 442).—DUNN'S Collection of curious Observations, etc.—a bad translation of some parts of the Lettres Edifiantes et Curieuses of the Missionary Jesuits.

PAGE 131.

That sublime bird, which flies always in the air.

“The Humma, a bird peculiar to the East. It is supposed to fly constantly in the air, and never touch the ground: it is looked upon as a bird of happy omen; and that every head it overshades will in time wear a crown."—RICHARDSON.

In the terms of alliance made by Fuzzel Oola Khan with Hyder, in 1760, one of the stipulations was, "that he should have the distinction of two honorary attendants standing behind him, holding fans composed of the feathers of the humma, according to the practice of his family."—WILKS'S South of India. He adds in a note:—"The Humma is a fabulous bird. The head over which its shadow once passes will assuredly be circled with a crown. The splendid little bird, suspended over the throne of Tippoo Sultaun, found at Seringapatam in 1799, was intended to represent this poetical fancy."

PAGE 131.

Whose words, like those on the Written Mountain, last for ever.

"To the pilgrims to Mount Sinai we must attribute the inscriptions, figures, etc. on those rocks, which have from thence acquired the name of the Written Mountain."—VOLNEY. M. Gebelin and others have been at much pains to attach some mysterious and important meaning to these inscriptions; but Niebuhr, as well as Volney, thinks that they must have been executed at idle hours by the travellers to Mount Sinai, "who were satisfied with cutting the unpolished rock with any pointed instrument; adding to their names and the date of their journeys some rude figures which bespeak the hand of a people but little skilled in the arts."—NIEBUHR.

PAGE 133.

From the dark hyacinth, to which Hafez compares his mistress's hair.

See NOTT's Hafez, Ode v.

PAGE 133.

To the Cámalatá, by whose rosy blossoms the heaven of Indra is scented.

“ The Cámalatá (called by Linnæus, Ipomæa) is the most beautiful of its order, both in the colour and form of its leaves and flowers; its elegant blossoms are ‘celestial rosy red, Love’s proper hue,’ and have justly procured it the name of Cámalatá, or Love’s Creeper.”—Sir W. JONES.

“ Cámalatá may also mean a mythological plant, by which all desires are granted to such as inhabit the heaven of Indra; and if ever flower was worthy of Paradise, it is our charming Ipomæa.”—Ib.

PAGE 133.

That Flower-loving Nymph, whom they worship in the temples of Kathay.

“ According to Father Premare, in his tract on Chinese Mythology, the mother of Fo-hi was the daughter of Heaven, surnamed Flower-loving; and as the nymph was walking alone on the bank of a river, she found herself encircled by a rainbow, after which she became pregnant, and, at the end of twelve years, was delivered of a son radiant as herself.”—Asiat. Res.

PAGE 137.

*On the blue flower, which—Bramins say—
Blooms no where but in Paradise.*

“ The Brahmins of this province insist that the blue Campac flowers only in Paradise.”—Sir W. JONES. It appears, however, from a curious letter of the Sultan of Menangcabow, given by Marsden, that one place on earth may lay claim to the possession of it. “ This is the Sultan, who keeps the flower Champaka that is blue, and to be found in no other country but his, being yellow elsewhere.”—MARSDEN'S Sumatra.

PAGE 138.

I know where the Isles of Perfume are.

DIODORUS mentions the Isle of Panchaia, to the south of Arabia Felix, where there was a temple of Jupiter. This island, or rather cluster of isles, has disappeared, “ sunk (says GRANDPRÉ) in the abyss made by the fire beneath their foundations.”—Voyage to the Indian Ocean.

PAGE 139.

*Whose air is balm ; whose ocean spreads
O'er coral rocks and amber beds ; etc.*

“ It is not like the Sea of India, whose bottom is rich with pearls and ambergris, whose mountains of the coast are stored with gold and precious stones, whose gulfs breed creatures that yield ivory, and among the plants of whose shores are ebony, red wood, and the wood of Hairzan, aloes, camphor, cloves, sandal-wood, and all other spices and aromatics ; where parrots and peacocks are birds of the forest, and musk and civet are collected upon the lands."—Travels of Two Mohammedans.

PAGE 139.

Thy pillar'd shades.

In the ground
The bended twigs take root, and daughters grow
About the mother tree, a pillar'd shade,
High over-arch'd, and echoing walks between.

MILTON.

For a particular description and plate of the Banyan-tree, see CORDINER'S Ceylon.

PAGE 139.

Thy monarchs and their thousand thrones.

“ With this immense treasure Mamood returned to Ghizni, and, in the year 400, prepared a magnificent festival, where he displayed to the people his wealth in golden thrones and in other ornaments, in a great plain without the city of Ghizni.”—FERISHTA.

PAGE 141.

*Blood like this,
For liberty shed, so holy is.*

Objections may be made to my use of the word Liberty, in this and more especially in the story that follows it, as totally inapplicable to any state of things that has ever existed in the East; but though I cannot, of course, mean to employ it in that enlarged and noble sense which is so well understood in the present day, and, I grieve to say, so little acted upon, yet it is no disparagement to the word to apply it to that national independence, that freedom from the interference and dictation of foreigners, without which, indeed, no liberty of any kind can exist, and for which both Hindoos and Persians fought against their Mussulman invaders with, in many cases, a bravery that deserved much better success.

PAGE 142.

Afric's Lunar Mountains.

“ Sometimes called,” says JACKSON, “ Jibbel Kumrie, or the white or lunar-coloured mountains; so a white horse is called by the Arabians a moon-coloured horse.”

PAGE 145.

*Only the fierce hyæna stalks
Throughout the city's desolate walks.*

“ Gondar was full of hyænas, from the time it turned dark, till the dawn of day, seeking the different pieces of slaughtered carcasses which this cruel and unclean people expose in the streets without burial, and who firmly believe that these animals are Falashta from the neighbouring mountains, transformed by magic, and come down to eat human flesh in the dark in safety.”—BRUCE.

PAGE 148.

But see,—who yonder comes.

This circumstance has been often introduced into poetry;—by Vincentius Fabricius, by Darwin, and lately, with very powerful effect, by Mr. Wilson.

PAGE 154.

The wild bees of Palestine.

“ Wild bees, frequent in Palestine, in hollow trunks or branches of trees, and the clefts of rocks. Thus it is said (Psalm 81), "honey out of the stony rock."—BURDER'S Oriental Customs.

PAGE 154.

*And, Jordan, those sweet banks of thine,
And woods so full of nightingales.*

"The river Jordan is on both sides beset with little, thick, and pleasant woods, among which thousands of nightingales warble all together."—THEVENOT.

PAGE 156.

*On the brink
Of a small imaret's rustic fount.*

Imaret, "hospice où on loge et nourrit, gratis, les pélerins pendant trois jours."—Toderini, translated by the ABBÉ DE CURNAND.—See also CASTELLAN'S Mœurs des Othomans, tom. v. p. 145.

PAGE 157.

*The boy has started from the bed
Of flowers, where he had laid his head,
And down upon the fragrant sod
Kneels.*

"Such Turks as at the common hours of prayer are on the road, or so employed as not to find convenience to attend the Mosques, are still obliged to execute that duty; nor are they ever known to fail, whatever business they are then about, but pray immediately when the hour alarms them, whatever they are about, in that very place they chance to stand on; insomuch that when a janissary, whom you have to guard you up and down the city, hears the notice which is given him from the steeples, he will turn about, stand still, and beckon with his hand, to tell his charge he must have patience for a while; when taking out his handkerchief, he spreads it on the ground, sits cross-legged thereupon, and says his prayers, though in the open market, which, having ended, he leaps briskly up, salutes the person whom he undertook to convey, and renews his journey with the mild expression of ghell gohnnun ghell, or, Come, dear, follow me."—AARON HILL'S Travels.

PAGE 165.

The Banyan Hospital.

"This account excited a desire of visiting the Banyan Hospital, as I had heard much of their benevolence to all kinds of animals that were either sick, lame, or infirm, through age or accident. On my arrival there were presented to my view many horses, cows, and oxen, in one apartment; in another, dogs, sheep, goats, and monkeys, with clean straw for them to repose on. Above stairs were depositories for seeds of many sorts, and flat broad dishes for water, for the use of birds and insects."—PARSONS.

It is said that all animals know the Banyans, that the most timid approach them, and that birds will fly nearer to them than to other people.—See GRANDPRÉ.

PAGE 165.

Whose sweetness was not to be drawn forth, like that of the fragrant grass near the Ganges, by crushing and trampling upon them.

"A very fragrant grass from the banks of the Ganges, near Heridwar, which in some places covers whole acres, and diffuses when crushed a strong odour."—

Sir W. JONES on the Spikenard of the Ancients.

PAGE 169.

Artisans, in Chariots.

Oriental Tales.

PAGE 169.

Waved plates of gold and silver flowers over their heads.

"Or rather," says SCOTT, upon the passage of Ferishta, from which this is taken, "small coin, stamped with the figure of a flower. They are still used in India to distribute in charity, and, on occasion, thrown by the purse-bearers of the great among the populace."

PAGE 170.

His delectable alley of trees.

This road is 250 leagues in length. It has "little pyramids or turrets," says BERNIER, "erected every half league, to mark the ways, and frequent wells to afford drink to passengers, and to water the young trees.

PAGE 172.

On the clear cold waters of which floated multitudes of the beautiful red lotus.

"Here is a large pagoda by a tank, on the water of which float multitudes of the beautiful red lotus: the flower is larger than that of the white water-lily, and is the most lovely of the nymphæas I have seen."—
Mrs. GRAHAM's Journal of a Residence in India.

PAGE 173.

Who, many hundred years since, had fled hither from their Arab conquerors.

“ On les voit, persécutés par les Khalifes, se retirer dans les montagnes du Kerman: plusieurs choisirent pour retraite la Tartarie et la Chine; d'autres s'arrêtèrent sur les bords du Gange, à l'est de Delhi.”—M. ANQUETIL, Mémoires de l'Académie, tom. xxxi. p. 346.

PAGE 174.

As a native of Cashmere, which had in the same manner become the prey of strangers.

“ Cashmere (says its historians) had its own Princes 4000 years before its conquest by Akbar in 1585. Akbar would have found some difficulty to reduce this Paradise of the Indies, situated as it is, within such a fortress of mountains, but its monarch Yusef Khan was basely betrayed by his Omrahs.”—PENNANT.

PAGE 175.

His story of the Fire-worshippers.

Voltaire tells us that, in his tragedy “ Les Guebres,” he was generally supposed to have alluded to the Jansenists; and I should not be surprised if this story of the Fire-worshippers were found capable of a similar doubleness of application.

PAGE 182.

Who, lull'd in cool kiosk or bower.

“ In the midst of the garden is the chiosk, that is, a large room, commonly beautified with a fine fountain in the midst of it. It is raised nine or ten steps, and inclosed with gilded lattices, round which vines, jessamines, and honeysuckles, make a sort of green wall; large trees are planted round this place, which is the scene of their greatest pleasures."—Lady M. W. MONTAGU.

PAGE 182.

Before their mirrors count the time.

The women of the East are never without their looking-glasses. "In Barbary," says SHAW, "they are so fond of their looking-glasses, which they hang upon their breasts, that they will not lay them aside, even when, after the drudgery of the day, they are obliged to go two or three miles with a pitcher or a goat's skin to fetch water."—Travels.

In other parts of Asia they wear little looking-glasses on their thumbs. "Hence (and from the lotus being considered the emblem of beauty) is the meaning of the following mute intercourse of two lovers before their parents.

"He with salute of deference due
A lotus to his forehead press'd;
She raised her mirror to his view,
Then turn'd it inward to her breast."

Asiatic Miscellany, vol. ii.

PAGE 185.

*Th' untrodden solitude
Of Ararat's tremendous peak.*

STRUY says, "I can well assure the reader that their opinion is not true, who suppose this mount to be inaccessible." He adds, that "the lower part of the mountain is cloudy, misty, and dark, the middlemost part very cold and like clouds of snow, but the upper regions perfectly calm."—It was on this mountain that the Ark was supposed to have rested after the Deluge, and part of it they say exists there still, which Struy thus gravely accounts for:—"Whereas none can remember that the air on the top of the hill did ever change or was subject either to wind or rain, which is presumed to be the reason that the Ark has endured so long without being rotten."—See CARRERI'S Travels, where the Doctor laughs at this whole account of Mount Ararat.

PAGE 193.

The Gheber belt that round him clung.

"Pour se distinguer des Idolâtres de l'Inde, les Guebres se ceignent tous d'un cordon de laine, ou du poil de chameau."—Encyclopédie Française.

D'Herbelot says this belt was generally of leather.

PAGE 193.

*Who, morn and even,
Hail their Creator's dwelling-place
Among the living lights of Heaven!*

"As to fire, the Ghebers place the spring-head of it in that globe of fire, the Sun, by them called Mythras, or Mihir, to which they pay the highest reverence, in gratitude for the manifold benefits flowing from its ministerial omniscience. But they are so far from confounding the subordination of the Servant with the majesty of its Creator, that they not only attribute no sort of sense or reasoning to the sun or fire, in any of its operations, but consider it as a purely passive blind instrument, directed and governed by the immediate impression on it of the will of God; but they do not even give that luminary, all glorious as it is, more than the second rank amongst his works, reserving the first for that stupendous production of Divine power, the mind of man."—GROSE. The false charges brought against the religion of these people by their Mussulman tyrants is but one proof among many of the truth of this writer's remark, "that calumny is often added to oppression, if but for the sake of justifying it."

PAGE 199.

That enchanted tree, which grows over the tomb of the musician Tan-Sein.

"Within the enclosure which surrounds this monument (at Gualior) is a small tomb to the memory of Tan-Sein, a musician of incomparable skill, who flourished at the court of Akbar. The tomb is overshadowed by a tree, concerning which a superstitious notion prevails, that the chewing of its leaves will give an extraordinary melody to the voice."—Narrative of a Journey from Agra to Ouzein, by W. HUNTER, Esq.

PAGE 199.

The awful signal of the bamboo-staff.

"It is usual to place a small white triangular flag, fixed to a bambo-staff of ten or twelve feet long, at the place where a tiger has destroyed a man. It is common for the passengers also to throw each a stone or brick near the spot, so that in the course of a little time a pile equal to a good waggon-load is collected. The sight of these flags and piles of stones imparts a certain melancholy, not perhaps altogether void of apprehension."—Oriental Field Sports, vol. ii.

PAGE 200.

Beneath the shade, some pious hands had erected, etc.

"The Ficus Indica is called the Pagod Tree and Tree of Councils; the first from the idols placed under its shade; the second, because meetings were held under its cool branches. In some places it is believed to be the haunt of spectres, as the ancient spreading oaks of Wales have been of fairies: in others are erected, beneath the shade, pillars of stone, or posts, elegantly carved and ornamented with the most beautiful porcelain to supply the use of mirrors."—PENNANT.

PAGE 202.

The nightingale now bends her flight.

"The nightingale sings from the Pomegranate-groves in the day-time, and from the loftiest trees at night."—RUSSEL'S Aleppo.

PAGE 206.

Before whose sabre's dazzling light, etc.

"When the bright cimeters make the eyes of our heroes wink."—The Moallakat, Poem of AMRU.

PAGE 208.

*As Lebanon's small mountain-flood
Is render'd holy by the ranks
Of sainted cedars on its banks.*

In the Lettres Edifiantes, there is a different cause assigned for its name of Holy. “In these are deep caverns, which formerly served as so many cells for a great number of recluses, who had chosen these retreats as the only witnesses upon earth of the severity of their penance. The tears of these pious penitents gave the river of which we have just treated the name of the Holy River.”—See CHATEAUBRIAND'S Beauties of Christianity.

PAGE 210.

*A rocky mountain, o'er the sea
Of Oman beetling awfully.*

This mountain is my own creation, as the “stupendous chain” of which I suppose it a link does not extend quite so far as the shores of the Persian Gulf. “This long and lofty range of mountains formerly divided Media from Assyria, and now forms the boundary of the Persian and Turkish empires. It runs parallel with the river Tigris and Persian Gulf, and almost disappearing in the vicinity of Gomberoon (Harmoza), seems once more to rise in the southern districts of Kerman, and, following an easterly course through the centre of Meckraun and Balouchistan, is entirely lost in the deserts of Sinde.”—KINNIER'S Persian Empire.

PAGE 211.

*That bold were Moslem, who would dare
At twilight hour to steer his skiff
Beneath the Gheber's lonely cliff.*

“ There is an extraordinary hill in this neighbourhood, called Kohé Gubr, or the Guebre's mountain. It rises in the form of a lofty cupola, and on the summit of it, they say, are the remains of an Atush Kudu, or Fire Temple. It is superstitiously held to be the residence of Deeves or Sprites, and many marvellous stories are recounted of the injury and witchcraft suffered by those who essayed in former days to ascend or explore it.”—POTTINGER'S Beloochistan.

PAGE 212.

Still did the mighty flame burn on.

“ At the city of Yezd in Persia which is distinguished by the appellation of the Darûb Abadut, or Seat of Religion, the Guebres are permitted to have an Atush Kudu or Fire Temple (which, they assert, has had the sacred fire in it since the days of Zoroaster) in their own compartment of the city ; but for this indulgence they are indebted to the avarice, not the tolerance of the Persian government, which taxes them at twenty-five rupees each man.”—POTTINGER'S Beloochistan.

PAGE 216.

*While on that altar's fires
They swore.*

“ Nul d'entre eux n'oserait se parjurer, quand il a pris à témoin cet élément terrible et vengeur.”—Encyclopédie Française.

PAGE 217.

The Persian lily shines and towers.

“A vivid verdure succeeds the autumnal rains, and the ploughed fields are covered with the Persian lily, of a resplendent yellow colour.”—RUSSEL’S Aleppo.

PAGE 224.

*Like Dead Sea fruits that tempt the eye,
But turn to ashes on the lips.*

“They say that there are apple-trees upon the sides of this sea, which bear very lovely fruit, but within are all full of ashes.”—THEVENOT. The same is asserted of the oranges there.—See WITMAN’S Travels in Asiatic Turkey.

“The Asphalt Lake, known by the name of the Dead Sea, is very remarkable on account of the considerable proportion of salt which it contains. In this respect it surpasses every other known water on the surface of the earth. This great proportion of bitter-tasted salts is the reason why neither animal nor plant can live in this water.”—KLAPROTH’S Chemical Analysis of the Water of the Dead Sea, Annals of Philosophy, January, 1813. HASSELQUIST, however, doubts the truth of this last assertion, as there are shell-fish to be found in the lake.

LORD BYRON has a similar allusion to the fruits of the Dead Sea, in that wonderful display of genius, his Third Canto of Childe Harold,—magnificent beyond any thing, perhaps, that even he has ever written.

PAGE 224.

While lakes, that shone in mockery nigh.

“ The Suhrab, or Water of the Desert, is said to be caused by the rarefaction of the atmosphere from extreme heat ; and, which augments the delusion, it is most frequent in hollows, where water might be expected to lodge. I have seen bushes and trees reflected in it, with as much accuracy as though it had been the face of a clear and still lake. ”—POTTINGER.

“ As to the unbelievers, their works are like a vapour in a plain, which the thirsty traveller thinketh to be water, until when he cometh thereto he findeth it to be nothing. ”—Koran, chap. 24.

PAGE 225.

A flower that the Bidmusk has just passed over.

“ A wind which prevails in February, called Bidmusk, from a small and odoriferous flower of that name. ”—“ The wind which blows these flowers commonly lasts till the end of the month. ”—LE BRUYN.

PAGE 225.

Where the sea-gipseys, who live for ever on the water.

“ The Biajús are of two races ; the one is settled on Borneo, and are a rude but warlike and industrious nation, who reckon themselves the original possessors of the island of Borneo. The other is a species of sea-gipseys, or itinerant fishermen, who live in small covered boats, and enjoy a perpetual summer on the eastern ocean, shifting to leeward from island to island, with the variations of the monsoon. In some of their customs this singular race resemble the natives of the Maldivia islands. The Maldivians annually launch a small bark, loaded with perfumes, gums, flowers, and odoriferous wood, and turn it adrift at the mercy of winds and waves, as an offering to the Spirit of the Winds; and sometimes similar offerings are made to the spirit whom they term the King of the Sea. In like manner the Biajús perform their offering to the god of evil, launching a small bark, loaded with all the sins and misfortunes of the nation, which are imagined to fall on the unhappy crew that may be so unlucky as first to meet with it."—Dr. LEYDEN on the Languages and Literature of the Indo-Chinese Nations.

PAGE 226.

The violet sherbets.

"The sweet-scented violet is one of the plants most esteemed, particularly for its great use in Sorbet, which they make of violet sugar."—HASSELQUIST.

"The sherbet they most esteem, and which is drank by the Grand Signor himself, is made of violets and sugar."—TAVERNIER.

PAGE 226.

The pathetic measure of Nava.

"Last of all she took a guitar, and sung a pathetic air in the measure called Nava, which is always used to express the lamentations of absent lovers."—Persian Tales.

PAGE 230.

Her ruby rosary.

“ Le Tespih, qui est un chapelet composé de 99 petites boules d’agate, de jaspe, d’ambre, de corail, ou d’autre matière précieuse. J’en ai vu un superbe au Seigneur Jerpos ; il était de belles et grosses perles parfaites et égales, estimé trente mille piastres.”— TODERINI.

PAGE 249.

A silk dyed with the blossoms of the sorrowful tree, Nilica.

“ Blossoms of the sorrowful Nyctanthes give a durable colour to silk.”—Remarks on the Husbandry of Bengal, p. 200. Nilica is one of the Indian names of this flower.—SIR W. JONES. The Persians call it Gul.—CARRERI.

PAGE 262.

*When pitying Heaven to roses turn’d
The death-flames that beneath him burn’d !*

Of their other Prophet, Zoroaster, there is a story told in DION PRUSÆUS, Orat. 36., that the love of wisdom and virtue leading him to a solitary life upon a mountain, he found it one day all in a flame, shining with celestial fire, out of which he came without any harm, and instituted certain sacrifices to God, who, he declared, then appeared to him.—See PATRICK on Exodus, iii. 2.

PAGE 291.

They were now not far from that Forbidden River.

“ Akbar, on his way, ordered a fort to be built upon the Nilab, which he called Attock, which means in the Indian language Forbidden; for, by the superstition of the Hindoos, it was held unlawful to cross that river."—Dow's Hindustan.

PAGE 292.

Resembling, she often thought, that people of Zinge.

“The inhabitants of this country (Zinge) are never afflicted with sadness or melancholy: on this subject the Sheikh ABU-AL-KHEIR-AZHARI has the following distich:—

“Who is the man without care or sorrow (tell) that I may rub my hand to him.

“(Behold) the Zingians, without care or sorrow, frolicksome with tipsiness and mirth.”

“The philosophers have discovered that the cause of this cheerfulness proceeds from the influence of the star Soheil, or Canopus, which rises over them every night.”—Extract from a geographical Persian Manuscript called Heft Aklim, or the Seven Climates, translated by W. OUSELEY, Esq.

PAGE 293.

Putting to death some hundreds of those unfortunate lizards.

“The lizard Stellio. The Arabs call it Hardun. The Turks kill it, for they imagine that by declining the head it mimics them when they say their prayers.”—HASSELQUIST.

PAGE 293.

About two miles from Hussun Abdaul were those Royal Gardens.

I am indebted for these particulars of Hussun Abdaul to the very interesting Introduction of Mr. ELPHINSTONE'S work upon Caubul.

PAGE 293.

As the Prophet said of Damascus, "it was too delicious."

"As you enter at that Bazar without the gate of Damascus, you see the Green Mosque, so called because it hath a steeple faced with green glazed bricks, which render it very resplendent; it is covered at top with a pavilion of the same stuff. The Turks say this mosque was made in that place, because Mahomet being come so far, would not enter the town, saying it was too delicious."—THEVENOT. This reminds one of the following pretty passage in Isaac Walton:—"When I sat last on this primrose bank, and looked down these meadows, I thought of them as Charles the Emperor did of the city of Florence, "that they were too pleasant to be looked on, but only on holidays."

PAGE 294.

Would remind the Princess of that difference, etc.

"Haroun Al Raschid, cinquième Khalife des Abasides, s'étant un jour brouillé avec une de ses maîtresses nommée Maridah, qu'il aimait cependant jusqu'à l'excès, et cette mésintelligence ayant déjà duré quelque temps , commença à s'ennuyer. Giafar Barmakî, son favori, qui s'en aperçut, commanda à Abbas ben Ahnaf, excellent Poëte de ce temps-là, de composer quelques vers sur le sujet de cette brouillerie. Ce Poëte exécuta l'ordre de Giafar, qui fit chanter ces vers par Moussali, en présence du Khalife, et ce Prince fut tellement touché de la tendresse des vers du Poëte et de la douceur de la voix du Musicien, qu'il alla aussitôt trouver Maridah, et fit sa paix avec elle."—D'HERBELOT.

PAGE 300.

Where the silken swing.

"The swing is a favourite pastime in the East, as promoting a circulation of air, extremely refreshing in those sultry climates."—RICHARDSON.

"The swings are adorned with festoons. This pastime is accompanied with music of voices and of instruments, hired by the masters of the swings."—THEVENOT.

PAGE 300.

*As if all the shores,
Like those of Kathay, utter'd music, and gave
An answer in song to the kiss of each wave.*

This miraculous quality has been attributed also to the shore of Attica. "Hujus littus ait Cappella contentum musicum illis terræ undis reddere, quod propter tantam eruditionis vim puto dictum."—LUDOV. VIVES in Augustin. de Civitat. Dei, lib. xviii. c. 8.

PAGE 313.

*The basil tuft, that waves
Its fragrant blossoms over graves.*

“The women in Egypt go, at least two days in the week, to pray and weep at the sepulchres of the dead; and the custom then is to throw upon the tombs a sort of herb, which the Arabs call rihan, and which is our sweet basil.”—MAILLET, lett. 10.

PAGE 315.

*The mountain-herb, that dyes
The tooth of the fawn like gold.*

NIEBUHR thinks this may be the herb which the Eastern alchymists look to as a means of making gold. “Most of those alchymical enthusiasts think themselves sure of success, if they could but find out the herb which gilds the teeth and gives a yellow colour to the flesh of the sheep that eat it. Even the oil of this plant must be of a golden colour. It is called Haschischat ed dab.”

Father JEROM DANDINI, however, asserts that the teeth of the goats at Mount Libanus are of a silver colour; and adds, “this confirms me in that which I observed in Candia; to wit, that the animals that live on Mount Ida eat a certain herb, which renders their teeth of a golden colour; which, according to my judgment, cannot otherwise proceed than from the mines which are under ground.”—DANDINI, Voyage to Mount Libanus.

PAGE 318.

'Tis I that mingle in one sweet measure
The past, the present, and future of pleasure.

“ Whenever our pleasure arises from a succession of sounds, it is a perception of complicated nature, made up of a sensation of the present sound or note, and an idea or remembrance of the foregoing, while their mixture and concurrence produce such a mysterious delight, as neither could have produced alone. And it is often heightened by an anticipation of the succeeding notes. Thus Sense, Memory, and Imagination, are conjunctively employed.”—GERRARD on Taste.

This is exactly the Epicurean theory of Pleasure, as explained by CICERO :—“ Quocirca corpus gaudere tamdiu, dum præsentem sentiret voluptatem; animum et præsentem percipere pariter cum corpore et prospicere venientem, nec præteritam præterfluere sinere.”

MADAME DE STAEL accounts, upon the same principle, for the gratification we derive from rhyme :—“ Elle est l'image de l'espérance et du souvenir. Un son nous fait désirer celui qui doit lui répondre, et quand le second retentit, il nous rappelle celui qui vient de nous échapper.”

PAGE 319.

'Tis dawn, at least that earlier dawn,
Whose glimpses are again withdrawn.

The Persians have two mornings, the Soobhi Kazim and the Soobhi Sadig, the false and the real day-break. They account for this phenomenon in a most whimsical manner. They say, that as the sun rises from behind the Kohi Qaf (Mount Caucasus), it passes a hole perforated through that mountain, and that darting its rays through it, it is the cause of the Soobhi Kazim, or this temporary appearance of day-break. As it ascends, the earth is again veiled in darkness, until the sun rises above the mountain and brings with it the Soobhi Sadig, or real morning."—SCOTT WARING. He thinks MILTON may allude to this, when he says,

Ere the blabbing Eastern scout
The nice morn on the Indian steep
From her cabin'd loop-hole peep.

PAGE 321.

*Held a feast
In his magnificent Shalimar.*

“ In the centre of the plain, as it approaches the Lake, one of the Delhi Emperors, I believe Shah Jehan, constructed a spacious garden called the Shalimar, which is abundantly stored with fruit-trees and flowering shrubs. Some of the rivulets which intersect the plain are led into a canal at the back of the garden, and, flowing through its centre, or occasionally thrown into a variety of water-works, compose the chief beauty of the Shalimar. To decorate this spot the Mogul Princes of India have displayed an equal magnificence and taste ; especially Jehan Gheer, who, with the enchanting Noor Mahl, made Kashmire his usual residence during the summer months. On arches thrown over the canal, are erected, at equal distances, four or five suites of apartments, each consisting of a saloon, with four rooms at the angles, where the followers of the court attend, and the servants prepare sherbets, coffee, and the hookah. The frame of the doors of the principal saloon is composed of pieces of a stone of a black colour, streaked with yellow lines, and of a closer grain and higher polish than porphyry. They were taken, it is said, from a Hindoo temple, by one of the Mogul princes, and are esteemed of great value."—FORSTER.

PAGE 328.

And oh ! if there be, etc.

“ Around the exterior of the Dewan Khass (a building of Shah Allum's) in the cornice are the following lines in letters of gold upon a ground of white marble—
‘ If there be a paradise upon earth, it is this, it is this. ’ ”
—FRANKLIN.

PAGE 336.

Like that painted porcelain.

“ The Chinese had formerly the art of painting, on the sides of porcelain vessels, fish and other animals, which were only perceptible when the vessel was full of some liquor. They call this species Kia-tsin, that is, azure is put in press, on account of the manner in which the azure is laid on.”—“ They are every now and then trying to recover the art of this magical painting, but to no purpose. ”—DUNN.

PAGE 337.

More perfect than the divinest images in the House of Azor.

An eminent carver of idols, said in the Koran to be father to Abraham. “ I have such a lovely idol as is not to be met with in the house of Azor.”— HAFIZ.

PAGE 338.

The grottos, hermitages, and miraculous fountains.

“ The pardonable superstition of the sequestered inhabitants has multiplied the places of worship of Mahadeo, of Bescham, and of Brama. All Cashmere is holy land, and miraculous fountains abound.”—
Major RENNELL'S Memoirs of a Map of Hindostan.

Jehanguire mentions “ a fountain in Cashmire called Tirnagh, which signifies a snake; probably because some large snake had formerly been seen there.”—
“ During the life-time of my father, I went twice to this fountain, which is about twenty coss from the city of Cashmeer. The vestiges of places of worship and sanctity are to be traced without number, amongst the ruins and the caves which are interspersed in its neighbourhood.”—TOOZEK JEHANGEERY.—See Asiat. Misc. vol. 2.

There is another account of Cashmere by Abul-Fazil, the author of the Ayin-Acbaree, “ who,” says Major RENNELL, “ appears to have caught some of the enthusiasm of the Valley, by his descriptions of the holy places in it.”

PAGE 338.

Whose houses, roof'd with flowers.

“On a standing roof of wood is laid a covering of fine earth, which shelters the building from the great quantity of snow that falls in the winter season. This fence communicates an equal warmth in winter, as a refreshing coolness in the summer season, when the tops of the houses, which are planted with a variety of flowers, exhibit at a distance the spacious view of a beautifully chequered parterre.”—FORSTER.

PAGE 339.

Lanterns of the triple-coloured tortoise-shell of Pegu.

“Two hundred slaves there are, who have no other office than to hunt the woods and marshes for triple-coloured tortoises for the King's Vivary. Of the shell of these also lanterns are made.”—VINCENT LE BLANC'S Travels.

PAGE 339.

The meteors of the north, as they are seen by those hunters.

For a description of the Aurora Borealis, as it appears to these hunters, see Encyclopædia.

PAGE 340.

The cold, odoriferous wind.

This wind, which is to blow from Syria Damascena, is, according to the Mahometans, one of the signs of the Last Day's approach.

Another of the signs is, “Great distress in the world, so that a man when he passes by another's grave shall say, Would to God I were in his place !"—SALE'S Preliminary Discourse.

PAGE 343.

The Cerulean Throne of Koolburga.

“ On Mahommed Shaw's return to Koolburga (the capital of Dekkan), he made a great festival, and mounted this throne with much pomp and magnificence, calling it Firozeh or Cerulean. I have heard some old persons, who saw the throne Firozeh in the reign of Sultan Mamood Bhamenee, describe it. They say that it was in length nine feet, and three in breadth; made of ebony, covered with plates of pure gold, and set with precious stones of immense value. Every prince of the house of Bhamenee, who possessed this Throne, made a point of adding to it some rich stones, so that when in the reign of Sultan Mamood it was taken to pieces, to remove some of the jewels to be set in vases and cups, the jewellers valued it at one crore of oons (nearly four millions sterling). I learned also that it was called Firozeh from being partly enamelled of a sky-blue colour, which was in time totally concealed by the number of jewels.”—FERISHTA.

END OF VOLUME I.

VOL. I.

Bayerische
Staatsbibliothek
München

18 so that a man when he passes by another's grave shall say, "Would to God I were in his place!" (Lamentations 4:10)

to be a man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

On the other hand, the man who is not a man, but a man who is not a man.

Moore, Thomas,

The works of Thomas Moore comprehending all his melodies, ballads etc. ;
never before published without the accompanying music

Bd.: 1

Paris (1823)

Bibl.Mont. 869-1

urn:nbn:de:bvb:12-bsb10713994-0